G. F. AMERICAN IS SUSPENDED

Temporary Suspension Due To Lack Of Funds. May Continue Next Week.

The American, the daily paper published by the Nonpartisan League at Grand Forks, suspended publication Monday. The last paper was published Friday but the crew was not turned out until Monday. The Tidende, a Norwegian weekly published in the American plant, ceased publication at the same time. The present financial stringency and inability to collect outstanding accounts, is given as the reason for suspension.

A meeting of stockholders is called for next week at which time it will be decided whether or not to make the suspension permanent. The American was incorporated at $100,000 and the Tidende at $50.000. Officials of the corporation deny it is bankrupt, and are of the opinion that the plant will resume operation after the annual meeting next week.

Winter Term Opens

The winter term of the Northwest School of Agriculture opened on January with a greatly increased attendance. Many students from this county are there qualifying themselves for the important duties of farm husbandry for the boys and home making for the girls. Increased accomodations at the school make it possible now to provide rooms for 254 students which is something different from ten years ago when only 85 could be accommodated. Last year 301 students were enrolled with good prospects this year for nearly as large a number.

Mr. and Mrs. N. Benoit spent New Year with his father at Red Lake Falls.

Same in Everything.

No matter how carefully you pick apples off a tree, there's a fine one away up there at the top that you missed. In life it's about th' same way.

How Weather Affects Brain.

Most persons have wondered at times why it is that their moods depend so much on the weather. A crisp, frosty day makes one feel cheerful and energetic. A damp, dull one tends to cause depression and listlessness. Dull, rainy weather means a low barometer. When the barometer is low the reduced pressure of the atmosphere lets the blood vessels near the surface of the skin dilate or swell, and so take up more than their share of blood. This makes the brain anemic and the flow of ideas runs slowly.

Dies From Injuries

Ed Sorvig, proprietor of a garage and electric light plant at Winger, died Wednesday night last week as result of injuries received in the light plant a week previous. How the accident occured will never be known, as Mr. Sorvig had a fractured skull and never regained consciousness after the injury. It is believed he became caught in some belting and was whirled about until his clothing gave way and he was thrown head first into the concrete floor. Funeral services were held at Winger Monday this week. Mr. Sorvig was formerly employed at the O. Hallstrom farm west of this place, and about eighteen months ago was married to Miss Lilly Hallstrom who survives him.

Heartfelt sympathy of many friends here is extended to the widow in her bereavement.

Selvig, president of the Red Lake Drainage Board, from Congressman Steenerson who introduced this bill. This bill provides for improving the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers within the Indian Reservation.

Matters pertaining to the good roads amendment, soldier bonus matters, drainage and others of equal importance will come in for a good deal of attention at this session. Old timers who have followed closely previous sessions declare this one will be one of the busiest ever held in this state.

Not So Noteworthy.

Some men take a great deal of credit to themselves for having worked for all they have. It is creditable, to be sure, but it isn't so unusual that it need attract general attention. It is the common way, and probably the best. Occasionally, a man discovers a gold mine, or realizes on the death of a rich aunt, but they are not usually as useful citizens nor as happy as those whose wealth depends on something more than luck or the chance of birth. And working for what you have is also the only available means open to the average man.—Arkansas Thomas Cat.

Didn't Have the Price.

Returning home from the dentist's, where he had gone to have a loose tooth drawn, little Raymond reported as follows: "The doctor told me 'fore he began that if I cried or screamed it would cost me a dollar, but if I was a good boy it would be only 50 cents. "Did you scream?" his mother asked. "How could I?" answered Ray; "you only gave me 50 cents."

Makes a Handy Tool.

From an old screwdriver may be made a handy tool for turning castellated nuts that are inaccessibly located. A slot is ground in the business end of the screwdriver of such a size that as the bolt comes through the nut its end enters the opening, where it does not interfere with the wielding of the turning tool.

Egyptians First in Field.

The earliest objects that civilization possesses in the way of ancient pottery show that the Egyptians were probably the first to use glazes, but the practice may have originated independently wherever a knowledge of early glazes were of the alkaline type, which had to be first fused into a glass before it could be applied to pottery.

First American Novelist.

The man who is usually referred to as the first American novelist and whose claim to the title seems to be undisputed, was Charles Brockden Brown, who was born in Philadelphia in 1771, and died in 1810. His best novel, "Wieland," is a morbid horror story, based on ventriloquism, and while improbable it contains scenes of great power. He published several other novels, and in 1799 a book on divorce and marriage which enunciated many views then considered very radical but now widely accepted. No other novels than his were published by a native American until the appearance of "The Spy," by James Fenimore Cooper, in 1831.

Simple Pottery Methods.

All primitive pottery, whether of ancient or modern times, has been made by the simplest methods. There are four processes, namely, molding, firing, glazing and coloring, although in the early stages of its development scarcely anything was known of glazing and coloring. The Egyptians adopted means similar to those of today to produce their wares. The clay dug from the earth's surface was prepared by beating and kneading with the hands or boards and the mass well tempered with water. From this mass vessels were shaped by cutting out a ball and by building piece by piece and smoothing down one layer upon another.

Many Shoes Made From One.

When a Mexican automobile refuses to wear an old shoe any longer, the shoe is sold for a few cents to a poor native; whereupon he and his family wear it. He cuts the shoe into thick slices which vary according to the size of the family's feet; thus out of one shoe he makes many. They retain their natural shape and are bound around the feet with thongs. In rainy weather nonskid shoes are worn by some of the more prosperous natives.—Popular Science Monthly.

"THE COBBLER"

By GERTRUDE BURNHAM.

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Sylvia's little foot tapped the station floor nervously. She was aware of the disquieting fact that there was a hole in the sole of her right pump. It really was foolish of her to wear that particular old pair just because they matched her dress. A hole in one's shoe was a calamity at any time, but doubly so today. Why, Breck might even carry out his mad scheme, so often proposed.

At this point in her reflections Miss Sylvia sighed and flushed. It was such a pity that Daddy Allen could and would not understand what a dear Breck was.

Just then Breck himself dashed in, tossed his overcoat on the seat beside Sylvia and joined the waiting line before the ticket window. He stopped a second to impart some information to her.

"Everything is top hole, angel child. We're going to remember today, and no mistake," he chuckled.

As she cast about despairingly for some speedy remedy she glimpsed a piece of paper lying on the floor near Breck's coat. Further inspection proved it to be stiff and heavy, needing only judicious folding to make it fit in the slipper. At any rate, it would do temporarily.

On the train the masterful Breck revealed his startling plan.

"Now that I have the contract which really establishes the business, I want you, too. There's a license in my pocket which has been there quite long enough. When we get to Harville we'll visit a certain nice old justice."

So in the course of an hour Sylvia allowed herself to be passively guided up a flight of dingy stairs and into an equally dingy office. A kindly faced, stout old gentleman came forward to greet them, seeming to understand their errand without explanation. The phenomenon of an eloping couple no longer caused him a thrill.

"Half a second and I'll have a witness in." He summoned an office boy from some other region, deliberately adjusted his spectacles and then remarked: "Now for the license. We'll be sure that is O. K. first."

Without the slightest hesitation Breck confidently reached his hand in his pocket and drew it forth—empty!

There ensued a profound silence, broken by an irrepressible chuckle from the office boy. Poor Sylvia, whose courage had been rapidly ebbing, wished herself a thousand miles away.

Further frenzied search failed to produce the missing document, and the young couple was finally forced to retreat, proffering apologies and crimson with embarrassment. The attorney bowed them out with a slight trace of weariness.

Later in the afternoon Sylvia and Breck parted. He was tremendously disappointed and chagrined, but Sylvia felt a thrill of wicked relief, for her idea of a wedding was vastly different. Besides, who ever heard of a girl being married with a hole in her shoe? She giggled at the thought.

At dinner Sylvia slid into her place, dreading the keen scrutiny and questioning of her father. He, however, was unusually amiable this evening, and when she ventured to mention the fact that she had been with Breck that afternoon did not protest acidly.

"So you think that you would be happier with that young whippersnapper, Breck Merrill, than you are with your old father?" he queried dryly.

"I never put it that way," retorted Sylvia spiritedly. "You know that I think the world of you, daddy, but I am going to marry Breck, just the same."

"Well," her father went on, a twinkle in his eye, "I see that he has just secured a contract I've been trying to get myself. He's a clever fellow, so I guess you can have him if you find him necessary to your happiness. I presume you will want the usual fripperies, so here's a check as a starter."

When the full import of this astounding announcement on the part of her parent broke upon the slighfly dazed Sylvia, she made swift and rapturous acknowledgment, then fled upstairs. In the seclusion of her room she pirouetted and kicked one small slipper high in the air.

It was the one with the hole in it, and the temporary sole fell out. Sylvia smiled reminiscently and picked it up. Some writing on the fold attracted her attention, and she opened the soiled paper.

So intensely interesting did she find it that she sat cross-legged on the floor and read it through with wrinkled brows, then laughed until the tears came. Growing somewhat calmer she jumped up, and still clutching the cause of her merriment dashed downstairs, skipping steps recklessly, one shoe off.

Mr. Allen, enjoying his cigar and newspaper in the library, wondered mildly what Sylvia found so amusing in her telephone conversation. Had he listened intently he would have heard these mystifying sentences badly mixed up with gurgles of laughter:

"Breck?, Yes, just as soon as you possibly can. Yes, father's home. He'll be delighted to see you. Honestly. What? No, I'm not spoofing. You'll never guess where I found it. Hustle over and I'll tell you everything."

The receiver clicked and Sylvia, still holding a badly damaged marriage license, sat down and laughed some more.

The Gift Supreme

By JESSIE E. SHERWIN

(©, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

The hundred dollar flag that had been donated to Corydon by its school children and worked for and saved for by those patriotic subscribers, was flaunting gayly in the breeze and there was a certain holiday aspect to affairs in general. In the little public square the town band of six pieces was playing on an elevated platform. There were gathered the principal local officers and half the population of the district grouped about them.

"What is the occasion of the gathering?" inquired a stranger on the steps of the hotel facing the pleasure grounds.

"Elmer Rolfe, one of our best citizens, built up Corydon to what it is, was a hero in the war and is going away. They have presented him with a handsome watch and chain and a credential as to his usefulness in this community that will carry him anywhere."

"Must amount to something to have a whole town turn out to do him honor. Politician? Wealthy?"

"Neither. He is a modest, purely human being, who came here an ignorant farm boy ten years ago. He served at the hardest kind of labor until he was twenty-five. Then he had saved up a litle money and took a spell of rest and study. Just over the hill is a little schoolhouse. The teacher, Miss Dorothy Walters, was only seventeen when Elmer, eight years her senior, applied for admission as a scholar."

"The big boy of the school, eh?"

"Just about that. He had to begin at the bottom. It was the alphabet, then the primer, and so on and up. He became the beloved of every child in the place with his hearty, good-natured ways. After two terms Miss Walters marked out a course of home study for him that finished him off an intelligent, well posted man in all the elements of a practical education."

"And then?"

"He loved the town, the people, the environment that had enabled him to make a man of himself. His one impulse was a desire to make the community better for their care of him. Elmer had an aptitude for construction. The town board got the idea of employing a manager. They selected him. Electric lights, traction, the telephone, new water and sewage system—he worked out all these problems as skillfully and far more economically than a professional engineer would have done. When the war came he was among the first to volunteer. Since his return he has finished up the last of his public utility work and has been offered a fine position in a sprouting Idaho town."

It was a wonderful day for Elmer Rolfe and his heart was full. Outside of the one great gift there were a score of minor ones. A motherly old lady had brought him two sweaters, knitted by herself, "to keep him warm out in the wilds."

As the functions were over and he got somewhat to himself, Elmer Rolfe looked all about as if searching for some particular person. Disappointment clouded his earnest, open face. Then it brightened as he noticed an old lady making toward him. She was the woman at whose home Dorothy Walters, the school teacher, had boarded for years.

"Dorothy was quite ill," she told him. "She asked me to bring this to you—only a copy of the book of poems you always liked. She bids you God speed and hopes you will write to her."

"Oh, I must see Dorothy before I go," he declared. "Do you think I could leave Corydon without thanking the one person who gave me education, courage, and hope?"

He spoke the last word sadly. The keen-eyed old lady caught the inflection of his tones and the emotion his eyes displayed.

"Hope—for what, Elmer?" she said yearningly, as if she had been his own mother.

"Oh, that applies to a vain dream of years agone," replied Elmer with affected lightness. "I never realized how grim and grizzled and old I was until I came back from the war and saw she was as fresh and sweet as when a young girl. You see—"

He stammered; he flushed. The old lady caught his arm. "Oh!" she spoke, "If I guess right, if you mean that you are hiding from Dorothy a love you feel for her—"

"Just that. But what then?"

"Go and tell her. Do you know why she is ill, why she shrinks from meeting you? It is because she is sick at heart at the thought of your going away."

A great joy came into the face of Elmer Rolfe. His eyes turned down the thoroughfare, at the end of which he could see, notwithstanding the distance, the little hill schoolhouse that was so dear to him.

"She has dreamed of that far country, where you are going, and has longed to join you. Blessed orphans! the two of you. Do you not see that you were made for one another? Oh, Elmer! If you love Dorothy, do not leave behind you the most precious gift in the universe, the love of the sweetest girl in all the world. Dorothy is in the hammock on the porch, wearing her poor heart away. Go and make her happy."

And when Elmer Rolfe delayed his departure and a month later took the train for his new home, it was amid a shower of white, glistening rice and a radiant-faced bride at his side.

Earth's Oil Distributed in Pores.

References to "lakes" or "streams" of oil are frequently made by persons unfamiliar with petroleum geology, or by those who wish to mislead them. The fact is that a so-called "pool" of oil consists really of a mass of sand saturated with it, or an area of crystalline limestone or porous rock containing oil in its pores. No subterranean hollow filled with oil, such as the novice pictures, ever has been found, and the locations of existing dry wells clearly prove the absence of any channels connecting the pools. —Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Wrens Like Human Society.

The house wren is one of the most sociable and confiding of birds and on this account they will build their nests in little houses that are built for them no matter how close to a human habitation, says the American Forestry Association, Washington. Furthermore, the wren is one of the most valuable of birds for it feeds entirely on insects and thus helps to save the trees and vegetables in the garden from the pests which would eat them. The wren builds its nest of grass or weeds stuffed into any crevice that takes its fancy.

A Bright Idea

By ALVAH J. GARTH

(©, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

"I don't suppose you care to have me drive you over to the harvest home in the rig Uncle Justin has given me?" observed Mort Bissell, with a searching glance at the prettiest face that had ever shone on him—that of Tessie Upham.

"And why not?" clearly and unhesitatingly challenged the fair young girl, with no trace of false pride or artful evasion in her manner.

"Oh, well, it is hardly a chariot, and the old nag is slow and clumsy looking. Now, if Uncle Justin's twenty-first birthday gift had been an automobile or a patent spring buggy!"

"We could have passed as beings with means, whereas we are both poor as church mice. Your company is what I appreciate, Mort, and I am not ashamed to ride in an humble, modest rig in keeping with our circumstances."

"You are a girl in a thousand, and you make me very happy, Tessie!" said Mort with heartiness and emotion. "Never mind. The old rig may be the starting point of a fortune, and the grander things of life may come along, if we are patient and persevering. Uncle Justin gave me some good advice. He suggested that I go to Springfield next week, and see if I cannot make an arrangement with some manufacturer to canvass for the sale of his goods, and deliver with the rig. There are half a dozen fellows I know of who have worked up a fine business."

They were nature's own children, those two, and happiness was bound to come to such sensible and harmonious souls. Tessie was only eighteen, but she knew more about housekeeping and thrift than the average woman of thirty. They had radiant plans for the future, content when they wedded to occupy two rooms in the Upham home, until they could earn and save enough to build a little cottage on a village lot Uncle Justin had promised them.

Mort was gone for half a week. He returned one afternoon about four o'clock, made out Tessie busy bustling in the kitchen, and went to the rear door.

"Hello, lovey!" he hailed, but at a glance she discerned that he was not enthused over his success in the city. She did not question him, however, but in her bright, pretty way told him how lonesome she had been during his brief absence and recited some of the events that had transpired in the meantime.

"Well," he said, after a time, "I haven't made the connection I expected."

"No?" interrogated Tessie gently. "I suppose it takes time to get things running right."

"The only two houses that at all encouraged me," went on Mort, "were, one a concern that publishes music. They expect me to go from house to house like a common peddler. The other company had books to sell on the installment plan. I tried that once, and I am not fitted for that kind of work."

"Why, Mort, you are smart enough to do anything that anybody else can do."

"Yes, perhaps," assented Mort a trifle gloomily, "but I was looking for a strict business proposition that will bring me in touch with people in a commercial way, like storekeepers and large buyers. What are you making, Tessie?"

A lot of bobbing, bristling bits of airy nothingness were visible in a kettle of boiling lard, and on the kitchen table was a great yellow crock heaped high with those that had just been removed from the receptacle.

"Vanities," replied Tessie. "Some friends are coming over this evening and I had some surplus dough, so I am making it up into something palatable. Try some."

She handed Mort a well-filled plate. He soon dispatched what it held, for the filmy "vanities" had little of bulk or substance. Then she took some dough, with a deft twist of her pretty hands made it into a graceful cornucopia, let it cook for a minute or two, and took it to the pantry, filled it with cream and berries and passed it to Mort with the words:

"There is something more substantial."

To her surprise Mort gave a great start. He held the delicacy before him, turning it round and round and inspecting it with critical eyes of suggestion and enlightenment.

"Why, Tessie!" he burst forth abruptly, "you've made a regular ice cream cone."

"And pray what is a regular ice cream cone?" inquired Tessie.

"A common article of use and profit in the city drug stores, and candy and soda water places. We are of the backwoods, surely, not to have had them introduced here long since. Where is my list?" and he produced it. "Yes, there are over a hundred places in the county where they sell ice cream. Tessie, my love, can you make up cones like that right along?"

"The simplest and easiest thing in the world, dear," came the prompt reply.

"Then our fortune is made!" declared Mort rapturously.

Which was somewhat extravagant, but the experiment that followed with these mutually industrious partners ushered in a business that was a stepping stone to larger commercial activities by the time of their wedding.

Sun Halos.

Halos around the sun are good weather signs, and many weather proverbs based upon the observation of halos are founded upon sound scientific principles, according to a writer in the Scientific American. Studies of the relation of halos to rainfall show that during the summer months 50 to 60 per cent of all halos are followed by rain within 36 hours. During the winter months 70 to 75 per cent are so followed. Precipitation follows sooner in winter than in summer because storms move more rapidly then.

The Perfect Color.

Green is a restful color. Oculists say that of all colors green is the most friendly to the optic nerve. In lands where eternal snows or eternal white sands flash up their glaring reflections, men have to shade their eyes or go blind. But green grass never bothers the eye. One can stare a forest in the face all day with impunity. Nature's greens never get on your nerves, and they never quarrel with any other of nature's colors and tints.

Splendid Specimens of Jade.

A Chinese custom is to place a piece of jade in the mouth of a person on his death. The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York contains a fine collection of specimens of jade from Chinese tombs. In the Indian museum collection of jades there is a large bowl on which a family of lapidaries in the employ of emperors of Delhi were engaged in engraving for three generations. It is priceless.

Cement Impaired by Age.

In a test of the effects of age on cement, keeping more than a year seemed to cause impairment, and cement that had been stored more than two years showed about the same strength as fresh cement only when the sand and gravel in a concrete mixture were reduced about 25 per cent. Mixing the old cement with a 5 per cent calcium chloride solution instead of water greatly increased the strength.

Bread in Variety for Foreigners.

In a tour of the various foreign quarters of New York, one may find a variety of breads: Asiatic small-bread, the blood-bread of Scandinavia, the braised-in-oil bean bread of the Japanese, the tree-pith biscuits of the Mongols. Chain bread comes in links and is the product of the Balkans and South Russia.

Extenuation.

The man who stole 900 pairs of stockings will, of course, try to gain sympathy in court by pleading that stocking darning is a lost or an abandoned art and that laundries do more harm than good. Added to these reasons why many pairs are necessary he may plead reluctance to wearing one pair until, as they say in mining camps, they become rights and lefts. —Sun and New York Herald.

Roast Peacock.

The swan was formerly in great favor for the table. The old bird calls for good teeth, but the young cygnet is tender and good. The meat is dark in color and tastes like goose with suggestion of hare. The peacock also was one of the most famous dishes at royal feasts in the middle ages, but it requires a world of basting to make it tender and palatable.

Odd Newspaper Subscriptions.

Greenland hasn't many newspapers of any kind, but the oddest of them all is a monthly paper called the Kalorikmit. (Did you get your tongue twisted after pronouncing this name?) The most unusual thing about this paper is that a three months' subscription costs two ducks, while it requires a sable skin to pay for a year.

One Thing Certain.

A New York apartment house advertises several six-room suites at $17,500 a year. We know nothing about these suites, but we do know that the tenant who occupies one of them doesn't make his money picking cotton or working in a sawmill.—Houston Post.

New Process Hardens Wood.

A new process of artificially aging and hardening wood, which is a new industry in Denmark, is said to give a quality of durability to timber heretofore regarded as worthless. Ash becomes like real teak and birch like mahogany.

First Negroes in America.

The first appearance of the negro in the English colonies in America was in 1610, when a cargo of negro slaves were landed at Jamestown. In 1790, when the first census was taken, there were 757,208 negroes in the United States.

Precious Mat.

We are told that there are but three mats of ivory in existence. The largest one measures eight by four feet, and, although made in the north of India, has a Greek design for a border. It is used only on state occasions, like the signing of important state documents. The cost of this precious mat was almost incalculable, for more than six thousand four hundred pounds of pure ivory were used in its construction. Only the finest and most flexible strips of material could be used, and the mat is like the finest woven fabric.

"Index Numbers."

The "index number" is a well-established device commonly used for measuring changes in wholesale and retail prices and rates of wages over long periods of time. It is constructed by securing each month the prices or rates of a uniform list, at certain specified places, and striking an average. Such numbers are usually reduced to percentages. The lowest price known is sometimes taken as a base, or as in case of investment stocks, 100 is used.

Citrous Powders.

Announcement is made of the discovery of a successful process for reducing orange juice and lemon juice to dry powders, the method adopted being much like that employed for the production of powdered milk. Dry air, at not too high a temperature, evaporates the juices to dryness, thus preserving the fresh flavor. When wanted for use, it is necessary merely to add water.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

LEGISLATURE STARTS GRIND

Interesting Points About Legislature Now Before State Lawmakers.

The Minnesota legislature has its law mill in full operation this week and numerous important bills are now before it. Tonnage tax and methods of handling state road money are being discussed at present. Below are given a few points in connection with taxation of cars this year, and the wide sleigh bill, both of interest to the people here.

1920 License Good

Much discussion is heard as to whether or not new auto licenses will be necessary this spring for those who have 1920 tags. Since passage of the good roads amendment, plans are being formulated or taxing or licensing cars according to the plan of that law. Until such time as a schedule is arranged, the old 1920 license tags are good. The old tags will hold good until July first this year if complete plans under the new law are not ready before that date.

No P. P. Tax On Autos

Contrary to general belief and supposition there will be no personal property tax on autos in Minnesota this year or hereafter. Cars will be taxed at so much each according to horsepower, weight and age according to a schedule now being made by the highway commission, and this money will be used for building roads under the Babcock law. No other taxes will be levied, and the auto tax will not be collected until June, if not later.

Wide Sleigh Law

A bill is now up before the state legislature which, if passed, will make it necessary for all sleigh users to widen their sleighs before a date to be set. The act passed at last session permits owners of old narrow sleighs to use them until worn out, but prohibits sale of new sleighs in anything but standard gauge. The last named act works a hardship on buyers of new sleighs so it is proposed to either repeal it entirely, or pass a new one making a uniform width for both old and new sleighs.

Death Claims St. Cloud Guest

Miss Ethel Johnson, who had been visiting at the home of her sister, Mrs. Colie Guy since last Augst answered the final call last evening at 11 o'clock at the age of 22 years. The young woman was taken suddenly ill two weeks ago with acute nephritis and heart complications. She was born in St. Hilaire, Minn., in 1898 and spent her childhood days at that place. Later in life she went to Tacoma, Wash., where she entered the Tacoma General Hospital, graduating two years ago. After her graduation she practiced for some time at Tacoma previous to coming to this city. Besides being an efficient nurse, Miss Johnson was a girl of sterling qualities. She made many friends in this city, who were shocked to learn of her sudden death. Besides her sister in this city the deceased is survived by her father, H. A. Johnson, four sisers, Mrs. William Jones of Manilla, P. I., Misses Eva and Hazel Johnson, and Mrs. J. A. Ervin and two brothers, Oscar and Walter Johnson, all of Tacoma, Wash. The remains will be shipped this afternoon to Tacoma, where burial will take place. Mrs. Guy will accompany the body.

The above article from the St. Cloud Journal-Press under date of Jan. 3, will be painful tidings to numerous local friends of the Johnson family who formerly resided here. Heartfelt sympathy of this community is extended to the immediate relatives in their sad loss of daughter and sister.

Medical aid was hastily summoned, but death came within a few minutes.

Mr. Bothmann is survived by his widow, two sons, William and Frank, and two daughters, one of whom is Mrs. Dan Johnson, and another married daughter in Dakota. Among other relatives are a brother and sister, the latter arriving here this morning from her home in Washington state. Funeral services are to be conducted today. A more extensive obituary will be published at a later date.

The ancient Greeks and Romans did not sit up at the table as we do, but reclined round it on couches, three and sometimes even four occupying one couch, at least this latter was the custom among the Romans. Each guest lay flat upon his chest while eating, reaching out his hand from time to time to the table for what he might require. As soon as he had made a sufficient meal he turned over upon his left side, leaning upon the elbow.—Harvard Classics.

Pagoda a Place of Worship.

A pagoda is a Hindu place of worship, containing an idol. It consists of three portions—an apartment surmounted by a dome, resting on columns, and accessible to all; a chamber into which only Brahmins are allowed to enter, and, lastly, a cell containing the statue of the deity, closed by massive gates. The most remarkable pagodas are those of Benares, Siam, Pegu and particularly that of Juggernaut in Orissa.

Gathering Coconuts.

Mature coconuts fall from the trees; but planters cannot always wait for them to fall, and there is no pole or ladder to reach one hundred feet; climbing is the only way, and cocotree climbing is a trade in coconut countries. Professional tree-climbers have the speed and agility of monkeys. To facilitate the operation, they place a strong loop of coir rope around the feet, near the ankles; this enables them to grip the tree securely and ascend the highest trees with amazing alacrity. The climbers are also tree-tappers, that is, tapping the coconut bud for the sap from which arrack is made.

Unmasculine.

Tommy had a profound contempt for the little boy next door, who threw a ball like a girl, seldom had on any but a clean shirt, and who generally wore gloves. "Do you know why he's a sissy?" asked Tommy of his aunt. "It's 'cause he looks just like his mother, and that shows he's got girl blood in him."—Harper's Magazine.

Will Be Tough on Painters.

It is believed by the Moslems that at the judgment day painters will be required to provide with souls all representations of human beings which they have made. Failing in this ordeal, they will lose their own soul as a forfeit for their presumptuous imitation of the work of the Creator.

Growth of Brazil Nuts.

The Brazil nuts are contained in a round, woody pencarp, or seed vessel, almost the size of a man's head, within which there are many of the seeds or nuts. These are packed so closely that it would be quite impossible to replace them once they were removed.

Women of Nepal.

The women of Nepal have no purdah system, the false modesty of covering the face with a veil. They freely move, and share the burden of maintenance of the family. They often wear a kind of short skirt and bodice made of cloth from their looms.

One of Nature's Acrobats.

The weasel has been called the acrobat of nature, and performs every kind of acrobatic feat. The blood-thirsty little villain is no coward. It will attack human beings. The weasel can climb as easily as run and is at home on any surface.

Speed—But That's All

A race horse owner got the surprise of his life when he matched his steed against a hungry razorback bound for the feed-bin—and the horse ran a poor second.

Razorbacks are excellent for speed, but not for pork or profits. Yet they are everywhere—even in this county. Of the 72,000,000 hogs in the United States less than 2,000,000 are pure-breds. Many of them differ from the genuine acorn chaser only in having an upholstering of corn-made fat on their lank frames. Deprive them of rich feed and good care for a time and their razorback qualities will appear.

Razorback blood is bad blood. Even a trace of it is a detriment to perfect development. Whatever good qualities a grade may possess are due solely to its pure-bred ancestry—none whatever to its razorback forebears. Only where all the blood is pure-bred do you find the perfect animal—big, meaty, well-proportioned.

More than 97 per cent of all the hogs in America are grades or scrubs. What a field for pure-breds! Let us help you make a start on your farm. Buy your foundation in your county and help home industry.

You can build up your business, too, by reading that big national weekly, THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN. It will warn you of impending market changes. It has wonderful facilities for gathering important farm news and it is interested in farm improvements everywhere. That is why it encourages the raising of pure-bred hogs. That is why it is aiding us in this publicity. You will find it a welcome friend and counsellor and a wonderful bargain at only $1.00 A YEAR (52 isues).

Lore of Precious Stones.

The emerald, the turquoise, the jade, sapphire and topaz all carry abundant lore of love, of sacred, and of healing description in their lovely rays and colors. The jade, associated with history from ancient days, is one of the oldest and most curious stones.

Toads Aid Horticulturists.

In Europe toads are carried to the cities to market and are purchased by the horticulturists, who by their aid are enabled to keep in check the multiplication of the insects that prey upon their fruits, flowers, etc.

Primitive Pottery.

Many primitive races seem to have burnished their pottery before it was fired, in order to get a glossy surface, and in other cases the surface was rendered waxy with resinous substances, which were often colored. There are only four kinds of glaze. Those used by the Egyptians, Syrians and Persians were of alkaline type and most uncertain in their workings. Lead glaze is one of the best and most widespread in use for ordinary purposes.

The Church of Massachusetts.

The Congregational became the established church of the Massachusetts Bay colony in 1651. The same spirit that excused the banishment of Anne Hutchinson and the hanging of the Quakers on the ground that their teaching endangered the stability of the government was at the basis of the act which made church membership a qualification for the franchise, and finally made the Congregational the established church of the colony.

Where Work Is a Party.

The flax combers of Portugal are a happy people. It is the custom on the Iberian peninsula to make the work a gala function. Garbed in their best, adorned with bright gold ornaments, their garments an array of color with gay embroidery, men and women meet to carry on the ordinary daily vocations. In Portugal, that of winding flax is usually given over to the women.—Popular Science Monthly.

Calendar Oddities.

January always begins on the same day of the week as October, and the same is true of April and July, September and December. Also February, March and November begin on the same day of the week. This, however, is true only in years of 365 days. A century can never begin on Wednesday, Friday or Saturday.

Ratiocination With a Twist.

A certain minister of state, rather well known throughout this world for shiftiness, had pledged himself definitely to a certain course of action; and some honorable members were discussing the probability of his keeping his word. One with a pretty wit said: "I think he will, although he said he would."—London Morning Post.

Porcelain Ware.

There is nothing so effective as gasoline to clean porcelain tubs and wash basins. A dry rag dipped in gasoline, then rubbed on the surface, will remove practically any discoloration or stain. Marks which will not come off, though scrubbed with cleaning powders and soaps, vanish like magic at the touch of gasoline.

Dark Outlook.

"Do you think the judge will be hard on me?" asked an offender who was waiting for that tardy official to return to his bench." "I don't know," said the court clerk. "He told me he was going to have some roast pork for lunch, and roast pork always disagrees with him."

Getting Sense.

There comes a clear day when one realizes that clothes are to keep the weather off you, that food is to give you health, that home is shelter and inspiration; that, aside from being clean and inoffensive, one's personal appearance does not signify very much; that the main thing in life is to be going along toward the goal of your ideals. That isn't getting old, it's getting sense. From then on Time is not master, but friend.—Collier's.

Truthful Comment.

A merchant recently placed an automatic weighing machine in front of his store. A few days afterward a citizen was observed standing on the machine and closely scrutinizing the dial. His hat was in his hand, although the thermometer marked a low temperature and a passer-by asked him why he had his hat off. "I want to see what I weigh without my outdoor garments," said the citizen blandly. His interlocutor walked away muttering: "He would not weigh much less if he took his head off as well."

An Old Beau

By RALPH HAMILTON

(©, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Oh, an old beau of Lesbia's," was the way Mrs. Durand replied to a neighbor when the latter, noticing a stranger coming and going from the Durand home through two days, was curious to know his identity.

"Not very old, Mrs. Durand," observed the inquirer. "Slightly older than Mr. Mayhew, but still a young man."

"Oh, yes," replied Mrs. Durand, "but he always was staid and reserved and looks beyond his years. When we lived at Rochelle, Foster Brock was a favorite caller at our home, a sort of chum of my son and a willing attendant and faithful slave of Lesbia's. When I say beau, I do not mean that they were in love with one another. Just a boy and girl friendship. When Alton Mayhew got acquainted with Lesbia and married her, Foster seemed glad and happy to have her settle down in life with so worthy a young man. He is on his way to Oregon, where he expects to join some relatives, buy a small fruit farm and become a bachelor agriculturist."

"He is a fine looking man, and so gentle and pleasant in his ways," commended the neighbor. "He had a coterie of little children about him yesterday, mending a top for one, fixing a kite for another and feasting the entire group on ice cream cones. He seems beyond the average in his goodness of heart."

Yes, Foster Brock had a good heart, and an aching one, if it must be known, but he had concealed that fact for a long time and was likely to preserve it as a secret. Little did Mrs. Durand read this sterling friend aright. His was a nature deep and lasting in its loyalty, full of noble inspirations, but patient, resigned where he did not receive the reward deserved. The one impelling emotion of his life was love for Lesbia. He had repressed the impulse to tell her of it. His attitude was that of a devoted friend with a brotherly interest in her welfare. She had never suspected his real sentiments. Had he disclosed them before her maiden fancy was captivated by Alton Mayhew, it might have been different, for Brock was a person any girl might honor and respect. So he bore his cross in silence when she married and now had decided to isolate himself and seek to forget the pain of his disappointment.

Lesbia had received him with all of her old-time girlish friendliness. Her husband made this sterling friend of the family heartily welcome. He was certainly a model husband, and Brock was glad that something he knew had never reached the ears of Lesbia. He had ascertained that in the past for over a year Mayhew had led a reckless, irregular career. It seemed, however that the influence of Lesbia had won him from even the memory of that bad year in his life. Its incidents had been confined to a far distant section, and Brock was gratified as time went on that not so much as a whisper of the truth reached the ears of the woman he loved.

It was his last afternoon in the city and about 3 o'clock Brock walked over to the pretty little home of Alton and Lesbia Mayhew. They were out for an auto ride, the maid told him, but had left word that if he came he was to wait for them and she placed an easy chair for Brock on the cool and shady porch.

A man came up the garden path a few moments after Brock had comfortably seated himself. He was a shrewd faced, keen eyed man, suggesting the collector or pettifogger. He slid uninvited into a chair beside Brock, bestowing upon him a searching glance.

"I hoped to find you alone, Mr. Mayhew," he said, looking about to see that no one was in sight. "I would dislike to arouse the suspicions of your wife or bring any public disgrace to you. I think we can fix up a matter that hangs over you and dismiss it once for all."

"Speak on," ordered Brock grimly. The covert threat implied the warning that the happiness of Lesbia might be involved in this man's visit and aroused Brock to keen interest at once, and he allowed the fact that he was accepted as Alton Mayhew to pass.

"Briefly and finally, then," said the stranger, "a client has placed in my hands a document you forged eight years ago. You will recall it. You were under the influence of bad advisers at the time and no one suffered a loss, but the note you so foolishly gave stands against you to disrupt your happiness and that of those dear to you unless you redeem it."

"And the amount involved?"

"Two thousand dollars."

The sum almost exhausted the full amount Brock had to invest in the farm he coveted. His lips set and then softened as he thought of Lesbia.

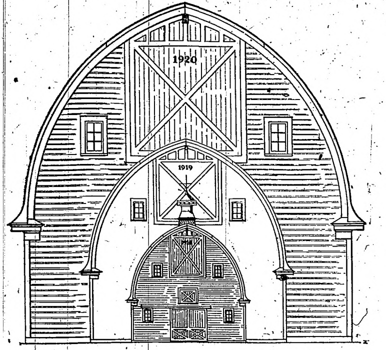
"I will pay the money—give me the note," he said, as quietly as though he was purchasing some cheap bauble.

And Alton Mayhew never knew, nor Lesbia. And a lonely man, toiling for others far removed from them, is glad and happy for the final sacrifice that insured peace and happiness to the idol of his soul.

Not in His Set.

Old Mr. Oldfam—Too bad! I hear that you and your father are not on speaking terms.

Young Mr. Newgilt—Certainly not. My father's in trade.



Three Times As Many Shevlin Gothics Sold Each Year

The farmers everywhere readily see the advantages of the Shevlin Gothic and want a barn like it. This accounts for the greatly increased demand for them every year. We sold three times as many Shevlin Gothics in 1919 as we did in 1918 and three times as many in 1920 as we sold in 1919.

Carefully prepared plans, ready-cut Gothic rafters and SHEVLIN QUALITY materials make every Gothic owner proud of his barn.

Real Amazon Kingdom.

Down on the little island of Tiburon, in the Gulf of California, when a dark-skinned youth of the Seri tribe is captivated by the charms of a dusky maiden, and she reciprocates, she does not timidly suggest that he "ask father." Father has nothing to say about the matter. Mother is the all-important member of the family, and it is to mother that the candidate for daughter's hand presents his claims. Tiburon, otherwise known as Shark island, is a real amazon kingdom, or perhaps queendom. The women are the heads of the family and rule the men with a hand of iron, graciously permitting them to attend to the work of gathering food, wood and water, while the wives, mothers and daughters take care of the serious business of governing the country. Although all the men on Tiburon are under the rule of their womenfolk, the newly married husband is the most abject of slaves.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Enjoins Safety by Prayers.

A solemn service is held every summer, at the beginning of the climbing season in the Swiss mountains, among the guides, many of whom are godly men, who know they take their lives in their hands when they ascend the Alps. So they bring their ropes with them and lay them at the foot of one of the mountains. Old and new ropes are piled in a heap, and then they are blessed by the pastor. Prayer is offered that the old ropes may still bear the strain safely and that the new ropes may prove equal to all the stress placed upon them. The guides are commended to the mercy of God that in their daily ascents they may be kept safe, and that they may succor the travelers who trust in them.

Tree Ring Formation.

Trees that grow in well-watered soil, as in the neighborhood of a swamp, have rings of a generally even width; according to the director of the Steward observatory at Tucson, Ariz., who has made an extensive study of the subject. Trees that grow on soil more largely dependent for its moisture upon rainfall have rings of greater variability; while on high altitudes, exposed to drought, some rings are so small as to be hardly perceptible. In estimating the climatic changes indicated in the width of rings it is obviously necessary to consider the degree of the tree's "sensitivity" to a greater or less rainfall.

Why Cat Does Not Get Fat.

Despite the fact that a cat rarely moves, it seldom becomes as fat as a dog would under similar circumstances. This is because its immobility is not that of inaction; its nerves are working while its muscles seem at rest.

DEDICATION EXERCISES JAN. 28

Appropriate Program To Mark Formal Opening Of New Building.

The new school building being now entirely completed and all equipment installed, Friday evening, January 28, has been set as the date for its dedication. Geo. A. Selke of the State Department of Education, has been secured to give the dedication address and appropriate exercises will be held. In connection with the exercises, the advisabilty of organizing a local community club will be discussed. County Agent McCann will be here to speak on the subject, and if enough interest is shown, will assist in organizing such a club.

After the exercises, the public is invited to look over the building, and partake of a light lunch which will be served free to all. It is hoped that all the people in St. Hilaire and territory tributary to it will turn out and show a live interest in what is one of the most up-to-date school buildings—bar none—in this part of the state, and of which the community has a right to be proud.

Funeral Thursday

Funeral services for the late Chr. Bothmnn, were held at the family home last Thursday afternoon by Rev. C. M. Grimsrud. A large number of friends and neighbors of the deceased were present at the funeral and made up the cortege which accompanied the remains to their last resting place in the cemetery at Thief River Falls. Mr. Bothmann and family have been residents of this locality for about eighteen years. By hard work and careful management, Mr. Bothmann succeeded in building up what is now one of the best farms in River Falls township. Always ready to back anything sponsored for good of his community, always honest and upright in all his dealings, he was regarded by all as an ideal citizen, and his passing will be noted with regret by the entire community.

Mrs. Martin McAndress is reported to be seriously ill at her home at Thief River Falls.

As noted by an adv elsewhere in this issue, a dance will be given at the Imperial hall after the show Saturday evening.

P. A. Blixt, who formerly resided here before moving to Superior, arrived last week for a visit with friends in this vicinity and at Thief River.

High School Burned

The high school building at Bemidji was destroyed by fire Monday this week. As bonds had been voted for a new building and plans accepted, work will be rushed to complete that this spring. Meanwhile, school classes have temporary quarters in churches and other buildings.

Old Time Blizzard

A genuine, old-time blizzard hit this part of the country Saturday evening and continued "blizzing" all night and until Sunday evening. Roads are badly drifted in some places especially where there is brush.

LOCAL RED CROSS IS REORGANIZED

Classes In Home Hygiene To Be Organized. Other Work Contemplated.

A meeting of members of the St. Hilaire Branch of the Pennington County Chapter of the American Red Cross was held at the village hall last Friday evening for the purpose of reorganizing and electing officers The constitution and by-laws of the pre-existing chapter were adopted without change for the new organization At election of officers, the following were named:

Chairman, G. W. Hooper, V. Chairman, M. H. Jackson, Secretary, Mrs. F. N. Bjerken, Treasurer, A. F. Hall. Twelve directors to hold office until the regular election in October, were named as follows: Mrs. G. W. Hooper, Mrs Anna Martz, Mrs. O. Gunstad, Miss Mabel Patterson, Mrs. A. S. Wilson, J. S. Roy, Dr. F. N. Bjerken, E. O. Burkee, C. A. Nelson, Paul Roy, E. Patenode, and A. J. Hed.

Mr. Hooper, as chairman, was chosen to represent the local branch on the executive board at the county seat. A committee of three consisting of Mesdames F. N. Bjerken, O. Gunstad, and Anna Martz was chosen to solicit members for classes of Home Hygiene and care of the sick, also to investigate the expense of obtaining a nurse.

Picture the agony of the poet who, just as he is approaching the completion of a lyric which is to be a thing of beauty and a joy forever, finds himself suddenly brought up against a word that won't rhyme! The great poets are not easily baffled, says a writer in John o'London's Weekly. For them difficulties exist merely that they may be overcome. He would be a very confident person who would say that there is any word in the English language that is absolutely unrhymable, and it may even be (I know not) that "silver" has found its rhymemate.

Honey Bee Laughed at Train.

That small and hairy creature, bird, insect or beast, the honey bee develops great speed on the western plains. In Oklahoma there was a passenger train making the traditional forty miles an hour. It was a warm day and the windows of the cab were wide open on both sides. A honey bee flew through the cab, grazing the nose of the startled engineer, turned at right angles, flew for a dozen miles beside the engine, and then, with an intelligent hum, put on a spurt and disappeared up the line ahead of the rocking train.—New York Tribune.

FIRE NEAR HAZEL FRIDAY MORNING

Fire Destroys Farm Home And Contents, Occupants Have Narrow Escape.

An early morning fire, said to have originated either from a defective chimney or an overheated stove, completely destroyed the residence on the Otto Ortloff farm east of Hazel last Friday morning. R. E. Locke and family occupied the building. The family were not aroused until the fire gained such headway that it was almost impossible to save any of the contents. Aside from a little clothing hastily gathered up, and a few articles of furniture taken out on the opposite side of the house from where the fire started, nothing was saved, and the family barely had time to get out before the building was a blazing furnace. Insurance was carried on the house, by the owner, but the contents are reported to be uninsured, so Mr. Locke will be a heavy loser.

Tree Has Many Uses.

For the coco-palms are found more uses than perhaps any other tree in the world, says the American Forestry association. This tree booms like a gun when blooming and provides the applejack of the tropics for the natives as well as its own burglar alarm to keep thieves away from its fruit. It is said by the people whom it furnishes with nearly all the necessaries of life that it has as many uses as there are days in the year; but that seems to be an under-estimate, for surely three hundred and sixty-five necessities would never meet the demand of modern, up-to-date man or woman of the temperate zone.

The average elevation of the state as computed by the geological survey is about 100 feet.

DEATH SUMMONS ANDREW HALL

Pioneer Resident Passes Away At Home Sunday Night. Funeral Yesterday.

Another pioneer of St. Hilaire passed away when Andrew Hall died at his home last Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. He had been in poor health for over a year, and this, coupled with extreme age, was the cause of death. Mr. Hall was born in Denmark August 9, 1841, so was nearly eighty years of age at death. He came to this country in 1865 and was married in 1879. To this union was born seven children, five of whom survive. Mrs. Hall died in 1903, and two of the children, Anton and Josie preceeded their father in death many years ago. Mr. Hall came to St. Hilaire in 1883, being a passenger on the first train to run on this line. He engaged in business here two years later and had engaged in various mercantile ventures up to some twelve years ago, when he retired. The surviving children are: Alice and Ferdinand of this village, Arthur of Keewatin, Albert of St. Paul, and Grace, who teaches at Ray, N. D.

All the children with exception of Grace, who was unable to come were here for the funeral as were also Christ Hall, brother of the deceased, who resides at Duluth, and Sullivan Hall, a nephew from Crookston.

Funeral services were conducted yesterday by Rev. J. B. Smith from the Methodist church, of which Mr. Hall has been a faithful member since 1878. Many floral tributes covered the bier, showing the esteem in which Grandpa Hall was held by all who knew him. Interment was made in the Swedish cemetery east of town.

"Folded Mountains"

The Appalachian mountains are so called because they have been covered by the plications or folds of the rock layers which make up the crust of the earth in this region. Some of the strata of rock have been so folded that they are practically on end or upside down.

One Thing at a Time.

Remember in dealing with most young workers that their minds are like those of children—they do not reason and they must be told only one thing at a time. And that one thing must be told quietly, clearly and without emotion.

Loving One's Enemies.

It is right that man should love those who have offended him. He will do so when he remembers that all men are his relations, and that it is through ignorance and involuntarily that they sin—and then we all die soon.—Marcus Aurelius.

Man and His Demands.

One great trouble with the world is man has taken himself too seriously. By no possibility can he be an angel, yet he is demanding that reward for his poor service here on earth. He is not entitled to prosperity and idleness at the same time; no arrangement can be made whereby this is possible. Yet he demands it. Man is an animal, living in a material world and must cut his cloth accordingly. To demand more than he is entitled to is a waste of time; he might make himself reasonably prosperous and content with the time he wastes in blubbering for the moon.—E. W. Howe's Monthly.

Chinese First in Field.

Of the many debts that Europe and America owe to China, not the least is that of the manufacture of ceramics. The Chinese were the original producers of vitrified translucent white ware which to this day among the English-speaking races bears the name of china. The Italians first named this ware porcelain, but the English, owing to the frequent use of the Persian word "chni" by the Italians, called it china. The growth of the industry is one of the many marvels of the world. Its history is as ancient as that of the pyramids.

Relation of Patient and Doctor.

The relations between a doctor and his patient are absolutely confidential and are safeguarded by law, which forbids a physician from testifying to what he has learned in treating the patient, unless the latter expressly waives his right to secrecy. If, however, a patient has employed several doctors, and has at a trial called some of these to testify to his condition as the result of an injury, the other side has a right to call other doctors, as the calling of some of the physicians by the plaintiff is a waiver of his rights.

Wood From Dead Trees.

Wood that is cut from sound dead trees— is it as good as wood cut from live ones? Many buyers are prejudiced against dead wood, but there seems to be no reason for it. The Forest Products Laboratory says that there is no way of distinguishing the dead from the live after the trees are sawed into lumber. Of course, dead trees that have been allowed to stand too long are apt to become decayed or infested by wood-boring insects. But trees that have been dead only a short time yield strong, lasting lumber.—Popular Science Monthly.

HER DESK

By MABEL W. SANFORD.

(Copyright.)

"Yes," said Brent, answering the deferentially questioning look in the eyes of the clerk, "I like these rooms very much. Did you say they are the only vacant apartment in the house?"

"Yes," returned the polite clerk promptly; "and we shouldn't have these to offer only that the young lady who had them was ill, and obliged to go home."

"I will take the rooms," he said. "But tell me: do all these pictures and this desk go with them, or do they belong to the young lady?"

"Well, it's this way," said the clerk; "they are to stay here if you wish them, not unless. You see, the young lady, Miss Castleton, is an artist—you have heard of her—and these pictures are mostly her own work. She used this room as a studio. And the desk is hers, too."

Stanley Brent was a young man of enough wealth to enable him to indulge his fancies; but he had concentrated all his energies and ambitions upon a novel, which had finally been accepted by a New York publishing firm on condition that he would make certain changes in the plot.

He found his new apartment all that could be desired in the way of stimulus. He whimsically attributed his success to the Chippendale desk, at which he did most of his work.

Hanging directly over the Chippendale desk, there was one picture which roused Brent's admiration and imagination more than all the rest. It was a study of a young man, with features faultlessly Greek, who looked the epitome of youth and poetry and love. It set Brent to weaving a romance at a faster pace than his own pen could follow.

"Yes, that's the man she loves, or did love when she painted it," he said to himself as he lighted his brier, and gave himself up to the joys of speculation.

And Brent put down his brier, and started on a prolonged search for a note from Miss Kingston, who had invited him to dine with her and her chum.

"Here it is," he said at last, spying a blue-gray sheet of note-paper in the far corner of a pigeonhole.

He pulled it out and began to read. A puzzled expression came over his face. He could not remember having received this strange letter:

"It is such a joy to love you that I feel as if I must tell you so. I fancy most women don't tell a man that they love him. They allow him to do all that. Well, my heart, I am different, that is all. I sit here looking at your wonderful face tonight, and it seems to me that you were born for love, just as a Greek statue was born for immortality. I cannot help adding my tribute of adoration, even while I feel that it will not touch you very deeply. Why should it? You must have wearied before this of the countless oblations offered on your altar. Nevertheless, because I love with a love which is as fresh and pure as it is lasting, I dare to tell you so, and sign myself

"Yours devotedly,
"ALICE CASTLETON."

This, then, was the way some women loved, Brent reflected, as he carefully replaced the tell-tale letter. He wished he had ever known that sort of girl. He made up his mind then and there to meet Alice Castleton, no matter what the pretext, as soon as he finished his novel.

He did not have to wait long, however. As he entered the house late in the afternoon of the next day, he was met by the clerk with a smile and the information that Miss Castleman was in his rooms.

Entering, he saw a plump, merry-faced girl in the act of jumping from a high chair with the fatal picture in her hands.

"How do you do?" she laughed. "I suppose you are Mr. Brent. Well, I am Alice Castleton. I hope you won't mind my taking Narcissus.

"The loquacious gentleman at the desk tells me you are a literary man," she continued, still in a serio-comic way. "Why don't you put us into a story, Narcissus and myself? I've even written him love letters in odd moments when I'd nothing better to do!"

Finally he summoned up sufficient courage to tell her about the note he had discovered, and his romantic deduction. Miss Castleton could not restrain her mirth.

"And now," she said, "which do you prefer, Mr. Brent—the blighted violet of your fancy or the prosaic reality?"

Brent was silent for a moment.

"Might one be permitted to be glad that a Narcissus seems to be his only rival?" he said finally.

"But you forget," laughed Miss Castleton, "that Narcissus spells art, and that art is long."

"May I not see you again?" he pleaded.

"Certainly," returned Miss Castleton. "I was just about to ask you to come to tea next Sunday at my new studio. Here is my card. I am sending for the desk tomorrow. Good-by, Mr. Brent. Until I see you again, remember I am consoling myself with Narcissus!"

Brent looked at the bit of pasteboard she had left in his hand, kissed it with reverence, and placed it in a conspicuous position on her Chippendale desk.

"And there are four beastly days," he sighed aloud, "until Sunday!"

The St. Hilaire School Review

State and six weeks' examinations are being held this week.

The Junior and Senior classes gave a party at the school house last Saturday evening to which the basket ball team was invited. A very enjoyable evening was had, and all were unanimous in their appreciation.

When it comes to the freshmen,
They're fresh allright,
Talk all day and sleep all night;
The Sophomores beat them—
You bet they do,
Yes, the freshmen, the Juniors and Seniors too.
The Juniors haven't got much to say,
They just get out of Johnson's way.
Some may prefer a Senior
Because they're of a privileged character,
But I prefer a Sophomore,
Because I'm one, you see.

—By a Sophomore.

Our baskat ball team was defeated at Greenbush last Friday by a score of 19 to 12. The defeat is somewhat of a mystery to many, but the defenders of the "crimson and white" say it will be solved Feb. 11, when Greenbush plays here.

Sophomore class meeting was held last Friday afternoon.

WHY THEY LOST

Sigurd: "The baskets were loose."

Hazen: "The floor was too slippery".

Nels: "I like to see the others shoot"

Melvin: "Ask Leo."

Leo: "It wasn't my fault."

Harvy: "I didn t get into it soon enough."

Mr. Johnson: "Ahem!"

The high school will have their big costume party Friday evening Committes have been hard at work and nothing will be left undone to make it a memorable occasion. No one is to be allowed in the building unless costumed.

Our school building will be dedicated Friday evening, Jan. 28. Geo. B. Selke of St. Paul, has been secured to give the dedication address. Every one who can possibly do so, should be there.

Stringent rules have been laid down by Mr. Johnson in regard to entering and leaving the building. No one will be allowed in the building until 8:30 in the morning and at 1:00 in the afternoon. Neither will anyone be allowed to leave their room without permission, and at no event will they be allowed to loaf about the building. The Seniors however, have been given a few privileges.

Let's stick to them!

Card Of Thanks

We wish to express our sincere thanks to our neighbors and friends for the beautiful floral offerings and the sympathy and assistance shown us, after the death of our father.

Deep-Sea Trolling.

Trolling for deep-sea game fish from the gondola of a low-flying dirigible, locating schools of fish from the air, and then tossing the hooks to them from the air, is a twist to angling pastimes to attract the attention of American sportsmen, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The first dirigible fishing expedition was carried out by a party of Los Angeles sportsmen, who flew from the city in a pony blimp to a point about 12 miles north and out to sea, from the harbor. The trip of 35 miles was accomplished in 50 minutes in spite of delays from a low-hanging fog, which made flight by compass necessary part of the way. While trolling at an elevation of some 80 feet and about ten miles from land, the big thrill of the expedition came when an eight-foot shark swallowed a big mackerel that one of the flying fishermen was reeling in.

Not Appreciated.

At one of the chaplaincies abroad the chaplain was a somewhat dour elderly Scotsman, who persistently resented any innovation in the service. A generous and wealthy member of the congregation, thinking it would be desirable to have the lesson read from a lectern instead of from the prayer desk, presented the church with a handsome brass one in the form of an eagle. The minister, however, did not take kindly to the lectern, and declined to use it the first morning, but toward evening he relented, and at the close of the service he astonished and entertained his congregation by solemnly making the following announcement: "I give notice that on Sabbath next the gospel will be read from that burrd."—Edinburgh Scotsman.

If we were transported to the shores of Borneo, we might see a group of natives gathered together under the tropical palms, watching two men sitting on their haunches, facing each other across an earthenware dish containing limewater. Each holds a clam in his raised hand, and at a signal, drops it into the limewater. It would not occur to us that this is a court of justice, that the two men leaning over the dish are litigants, and that he whose clam first winces on falling into the limewater loses the case. The people of Borneo believe that their gods give this as a sign to show who is in the right.—Louis Bartlett, in Atlantic Monthly

The 350,000 American Indians in the United States are gradually being "absorbed in the body politic of the nation." They have changed from game hunters and wanderers to land holders and home builders. About 37,000 farmers are cultivating almost 1,000,000 acres and 47,000 own live stock worth about $38,000,000. It is said that there are a few Indian students in almost all colleges in the country.

FARM CROP SHOW FEBRUARY 7-11

Great Plans Made For The Winter Show To Be Held At Crookston.

The annual Red River Valley Winter Live Stock and Farm Crops Show to be held at Crookston from February 7 to 11, is going to be the best show ever put on by the association, according to reports. Like former shows, there will be stock judging contests, speaking, grain exhibits, etc., but it will all be on a larger scale this year. Under special arrangements made with the railroads, one fare and a half for the round trip will apply on all roads leading to Crookston during the week of the show. Men and women of state and national renown are on the program to give addresses on vital problems relating to farming, marketing and the home. It will be well worth anyone's time to spend a few days at Crookston this year, and all who can possibly get away should plan to be there.

Annual Meeting

Notices are being mailed to shareholders in the local creamery appraising them of the annual meeting which will be held here Monday, Feb. 7. A very important matter, that of devising ways and means of erecting a new creamery building, will be taken up at this meeting.

Arthur Hall, who was called here last week by the death of his father, left Friday evening for his home at Keewatin, Minn.

After undergoing an operation for appendicitis at the hospital at Grand Forks, Mrs. Oscar Carlson returned home last Friday. She feels much better and is gaining strength rapidly.

While hauling corn fodder last Saturday, John Maskrud suffered a dizzy spell and fell from the load. He was severly bruised but is now up and around again, apparently as well as ever.

P. P. Tax List Out

In this issue of the Spectator will be found in the personal property tax list for the village and townships in territory tributary to St. Hilaire. The list comes in a handy supplement form which makes it adaptable for filing. Keep your copy for comperison with future lists. No other notice is given except thru the newspapers and it is up to everyone on the list to pay their taxes before March 1, if they wish to avoid penalty for failure to do so.

The present winter is one of the most remarkable ever experienced in this part of the state. The mercury has not been below zero for a longer period than two days at a time, and thawing weather has occured every week in January which is always considered the coldest month of the year.

Ten cents per pound will be paid for clean cotton rags delivered at the Spectator office, providing they are clean washed and have all hooks, eyes, butons, and other foreign material removed, and that the rags are in large pieces.

Begone Dull Facts.

Two friendly little neighbors, aged respectively 4½ and 5 years, recently seated themselves on the curbstone near my windows for a religious discussion. It seemed they had overheard some grown-ups repeating a recent prophecy of a certain sect as to the imminent end of the world and were greatly exercised at the report. The elder child, a fair-haired skeptic from a northern state, scornfully declared that he didn't believe the story; but the swarthy, dark-eyed little Texan solemnly asserted: "Yes, it's true; I know it's true; foh this mo'nin' I read it in mah Bible." The midget doesn't know one letter of the alphabet from another, but he refuses to be pinned down to vulgar facts when his spirit wishes to soar. Are children of the period brighter than their predecessors? At his age I am sure I could not have fibbed with so solemn and convincing an air.—Los Angeles Times.

Oysters Have Many Enemies.

Between the planting and the harvest, an interval of from two to five years, the oyster culturist assume many hazards. On the New England coast, after all his material is down the fickle "set" may not appear, possibly because at the critical time some weather disturbance may have killed the baby oysters while they were yet swimming near the surface. In the Gulf of Mexico the "set" may be so heavy that there is scant room for the oysters to grow, and many die, while those that are left are half starved and misshapen from crowding. Even when the little oysters or "spat," have attached themselves in favorable numbers, their perils have just begun. They are never safe from other enemies until they fall into the hands of their arch foes.

TWO IDEAS OF CIVIL LIBERTY

Difference Between Governments of Greece and Rome and Those of the Gothic Tribes.

There was this radical difference between the governments of Greece and Rome and those of the Gothic tribes. In the former the state was everything, the individual nothing; the state was thought to have a perfect right to the property, liberty, and even life, of its citizens. In the latter the individual was everything and the state comparatively nothing; all rights were thought to exist, to inhere by nature in the individual; and the state could demand nothing from him for public use without giving him an equivalent. Here we find the fundamental principle of civil liberty; that principle which has been so carefully guarded in the English and in all the Anglo-American constitutions, and which was so happily and tersely expressed by Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence. Our rude Saxon ancestors, though under a kingly government, had more real liberty, and a more just appreciation of the true dignity of man, than had the polished citizens of the republics of the Mediterranean. The legislative authority was vested in the witenage-mote, or assembly of wise men.—Dexter A. Hawkins.

Postpone Action

A meeting of the Red Cross was held Monday evening to determine what course should be taken in regard to the proposed nursing classes. After a thoro discussion, the matter was laid over until next meeting at which time it will be considered again. All are in favor of the classes and they will undoubtedly be started later on.

Fred Gunstad returned yesterday from Crookston where he has connected with the Crookston Daily Times in its mechanical department. He will leave Monday to begin work.

Chr. Kruse has been laid up lately with a severe attack of sciatic rheumatism. He was improved enough so he came to town yesterday, but is still far from free of the painful affliction.

Putting Mystery to Work.

Let no one argue that because the mind is still intangible—and probably always will be to mortal man—that psychology is impracticable. Electricity is an unknown quantity; no one knows whence it cometh or whither it goeth; yet it would be hard to find anything more practical than an electric fan on a sweltering day—to take one of the least and most homely of its uses. Although mysterious, electricity can be directed, its reactions predicted, and its power ascertained. The result is that the element is exceedingly useful.—R. H. Platt, Jr., in the World's Work.

Jack Rabbit Surely Insane.

Out in Kansas a crazy jack rabbit started up beside a passenger train making 40 miles an hour. The passengers crowded the platforms and the windows and whooped it up for the jack. The jack went completely insane and raced the train for miles, never losing an inch or a jump. As the train and jack flashed past the last mile post neck and neck the jack curled up in the air in the middle of a jump and lighted, squatted on his haunches, and rubbed one of his forefeet over his nose. The jack rabbit is speedy, all right, but he's plumb crazy.—Los Angles Times.

DEDICATION FRIDAY NIGHT

Appropriate Exercises To Mark Formal Opening Of New School.

The stage is all set and everything is in readiness for dedication of the new school building. Ceremonies take place in the building tomorrow evening. Invitations have been mailed out to everybody in this vicinity, but if there should be anyone who failed to receive one, they must not consider themselves uninvited. Every resident in St. Hilaire and townships adjoining is invited, whether he or she received an invitation or not, to come and spend the evening at the exercises, and afterward inspect the fine building. Light lunch will be served free to all. It is the desire of the people in the district to make this gathering a community one and for that reason particular stress is laid on that it is not necessary to have a special invitation, nor belong to this district in order to attend.

Bring your family and friends—you are all welcome.

K. O. Gigstad and A. F. Hall attended to business matters at the county seat Tuesday.

Aug. Berglund who has been employed in a paper mill up in northern Quebec, writes home that he expects to be back here some time either last of this month or first of next to spend the balance of the winter.

Bray Mutual Statement

On another page will be found the annual statement of condition of the Bray Mutual Fire Insurance Company. The statement shows the company has enjoyed substantial growth the past year, and that it is in excellent shape financially. The Bray Mutual furnishes insurance at a very cheap rate, in fact, a whole set of farm buidings can be insured for a reasonable amount at less for a five year term than it would cost yearly for a business house in town. The company insures rural risks only and does not operate in any incorporated towns within the two counties where it does business.

Movie Theaters in Rio.

It is at the cinema theaters that the Cariocas (citizens of Rio de Janeiro) know real comfort; for, unlike our moving-picture houses, those in Rio have spacious waiting-rooms, where you sit, listening to excellent music, until the hour for the first reel comes round. The pioneer house of the kind inaugurated this custom, and now the people refuse to stand outside waiting for the even hour to arrive or to enter after the film has started. With so much profitable space taken from the auditorium, the movies in Rio Janeiro are not as great money-makers as with us. The American favorites are popular, quite outclassing Italian and Brazilian film stars.—Harriet Chalmers Adams in National Geographic Magazine.

Fresh Vegetables Best.

That raw food contains more of the protective elements than cooked food was shown by an experiment with pigeons fed a grain diet which had been heated to destroy the protective elements. They developed beri-beri in from 40 to 80 days. Other pigeons receiving raw potato in addition to heated grain were in excellent condition during the 500 days of the experiment. The protective value of fresh raw potato was contrasted with that of dried potato in another experiment, and the results indicated that, while dried vegetables are not without value as a protection against beri-beri, yet fresh vegetables are very much better.

Famous "Regent" Diamond.

The Regent or Pitt diamond, considered the finest and most perfect brilliant in Europe, which was bought by Mr. Pitt, governor of Madras, in 1702, for about $100,000, is the next largest to the Koh-i-noor. He bought it in London, had it cut as a brilliant and sold it to the duke of Orleans for Louis XV. for 2,500,000 francs (normally about $500,000). It was sent to Berlin at the time of the first French revolution, but reappeared in the hilt of the sword of state worn by Napoleon I. This stone underwent two years of constant manipulation at the hands of gem cutters before it was complete.

Remorseful Ghost.

A pathetic story is told of the ghost of Bisham abbey. It is said that the wife of Sir Thomas Hobby was unnaturally severe with her son, who, it seems, had a peculiar aversion to writing, and in his obstinacy would wilfully blot his copybooks. One day his mother, enraged at his perverseness, lost her self-control and beat the poor boy so unmercifully that he died from his injuries. Since then one of the bedrooms in the abbey has been haunted by the specter of the cruel woman, who glides through the chamber in the act of washing the bloodstains from her hands.

It is stated that some years ago, when an old window shutter of the sixteenth century was removed, "a packet of antique copybooks of that period was discovered pushed into the wall between the joists of the skirting, and several of these books, on which young Hobby's name was written, were covered with blots."

Inspect Moths by Machine.

An elaborate machine called the choseiki is used by the Japanese in the inspection of silkworms for disease. The machine in the inspection house of Nagano prefecture requires 2,000 microscopes and a large corps of workers.

Moths are made to lay their eggs each on one square of sheets of cardboard bearing 28 numbered squares. They then are killed, their bodies pulverized and examined. If the bacilli are found, the square containing the eggs laid by the diseased moths is cut out and burned.—Japan Advertiser.

CIVIC ORDINANCE IN JAPAN

All Houses Have Tablet Telling Name of the Responsible Dweller Within the Walls.

In Japan you can learn a good many things about the resident of a house merely by looking at his door. According to police regulations, says a writer in Chambers' Journal the entrance to every residence must have a small wooden tablet affixed to it. This tablet has the name and the number of the house on it, and on another tablet is the name of the responsible householder, who in many cases is an infant, a younger brother of a relative.

Sometimes, though rarely, the names of other inmates are placed over the door, but there is no police regulation that requires it, except in the case of boarding houses, which have to place their boarders' names outside for all to see. A person fortunate enough to possess a telephone always has the number proudly displayed over his entrance. Near it you will often see a quaint enameled or tin disk. That is the fire insurance mark. Every fire insurance company has its own special metal plate, which it nails to the lintel when it insures a house.

There are always several small pieces of paper pasted over the door, placed there by the police. One is to certify that the periodical osholi, or great cleaning, has taken place. Another paper tells us, perhaps, that the sanitary conditions are satisfactory. What others stand for is known only to the police themselves; that they give secret information about the inmates is certain.

Formerly it was the rule that, if there was a well upon the premises, the fact had to be proclaimed by a square board marked with the character for well—ido. This was to show where people could obtain water in case of fire in the neighborhood. The regulation may still be in force in country places, but owing to water now being piped, it is no longer enforced in the cities.

Mrs. O. C. Peterson was hostess to about eighteen ladies last Saturday afternoon in the form of a surprise shower given in honor of Mrs. R. E. Locke. The afternoon was spent in music and conversation, after which a luncheon was served. Mrs. Locke was the receipent of many useful gifts. The R. E. Locke family recently lost their home by fire.

Last Christmas, a house in Leeds was visited by an amazing ghost.

A woman, returning home, went into the kitchen to warm herself at the fire. Suddenly she was startled to see two long white arms emerge from the flames. Nearer and nearer they came, until they gripped her arms above the elbow.

The touch was like red hot iron, and she fell fainting to the ground. When she recovered she was surprised to find that there had been no fire in the grate. She visited a doctor, who examined her arms and found distinct signs of burns. This was afterward corroborated by another doctor.—London Mail.

"The Right Kind of Child."

Give a little love to a child, and you get a great deal back. It loves everything near it, when it is the right kind of child—would hurt nothing, would give the best it has away, always, if you need it—does not lay plans for getting everything in the house for itself, and delights in helping people; you cannot please it so much as by giving it a chance of being useful, in ever so little a way.—John Ruskin.

The Mortgage Lifter

The hog has aptly been called the great American Mortgage Lifter. The good farmer raises more hogs to buy more land to grow more corn to raise more hogs. When soil was cheap the scrub hog was able to bear the burden of land investment. As land values grew higher the burden became heavier and the scrub could no longer lift the mortage. The grade hog managed it for a while, until land values soared again. But now the grade hasn't the heft to lift the mortgage. There is only one hog that fits high-priced farm land—the purebred. He has the stamina, the vigor and the body-building qualities that enable him to get right under those heavy land investments and carry them along.

Now, when prices are undergoing deflation and values have not yet come to a point of stability, is the opportune hour for getting into the purebred business. Get the kind of hog now that goes with more valuable farm land. You will be ahead of the rush that will come later when this new factor in farming efficiency becomes generally realized. We are ready to help you get started.

While you are raising better hogs you will find THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN mighty useful. That big national farm weekly will help you settle many problems wisely. A subscription for it hires approximately fifty trained investigators and writers to work for you a year—all for one dollar. We know of no way in which you can buy so much information and entertainment for so little.

Why, of Course.

Pop Moore, relates Louge, believes in telling children the truth, and when his youngster heard him read the weather prediction and inquired how the weather man knew, Pop laid aside his paper and explained the best he could. He told of the charts, the instruments, the telegraphic reports, etc. "And that's how he finds out the weather for tomorrow." he finished. The kid listened intently, sat thoughtful for a few minutes, and then earnestly inquired: "And then does he tell God?"

Relatives

By CLARA BARTON

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Helen, how dared you refuse Mrs. Smith's invitation in such an ungracious, abrupt manner?" asked Elsie in astonishment.

"Didn't you hear her intimate that she'd treat me just like one of the family?"

"Isn't that the height of hospitality, to make guests feel as if they were at home?"

"There's no place just like home," answered Helen emphatically, "and I'm rather glad of it. Who wants to be treated when she's visiting with that easy familiarity and the realisms showered upon a relative?"

"I haven't done much globe trotting and my experience has been rather limited," said Elsie, "but what has made you so cynical?"

"When I visited my aristocratic cousins the Sterlings, I was received with cordial greetings and had visions of a very gay week-end, until Cousin Jane announced, 'Put your wraps and bag anywhere; the maid is out. I hope you're not hungry as we have only a light lunch. We're not going to make any fuss over you, but treat you just as though you were one of us.'"

"Didn't you have enough to satiate your hunger?"

"Hardly. A simple repast served on gorgeous dishes is no more sustaining, even if a butler stands in back of you and picks up your napkin, than if you are served on premium dishes that come with a pound of coffee. We were hardly through when the baby commenced to whine. 'We'll have to stay with her while the nurse goes on an errand,' said my hostess. The next hour was spent in entertaining the youngster, who broke my eye-glasses and then laughed with joy."

"I suppose you had to meet all of your cousin's friends and be on exhibition the rest of the time," said Elsie sympathetically.

"No such luck. As the infant could not be trusted alone he was left in my charge for the greater part of the afternoon while Mrs. Sterling entertained company. Upon the departure of her visitors, my aristocratic cousin said in her most charming manner, 'Dearie, Mrs. Johnson can't attend the meeting of the U. S. L., so I have to write a paper to read in place of hers. Will you assist me? You're so clever. It will be real quiet here tonight. I knew you'd prefer spending the evening with us rather than by being bored by strangers."

"How selfish. Didn't you meet any young men?"

"Not that you could notice it. We labored over the intricacies of the suffrage question until I crept to my room weary with the words, 'Votes for Women,' ringing in my ears. Hardly had I fallen asleep when a thundering knock at the door awakened me. Hastily dressing I rushed downstairs to inquire what the trouble was. My host accosted me with a smile. 'We're early risers,' he said. 'Usually our guests have their breakfasts in their room, but as you're just like one of the family, we thought you'd prefer to join us. Didn't you rest well? You look rather tired.' I assured him I felt splendid, and then sat down to listen to family arguments and complaints about the high cost of living, extravagant wives, and sarcastic remarks about husbands who were growing too stout."

"Rather interesting," commented Elsie. "You're usually so tactful I presume you had eyes that didn't see and ears that didn't hear family squabbles."

"Just so."

"Did you go motoring often?"

"No. I was compelled to refuse an invitation as my cousin said it was so rarely she had anyone whom she could trust to tell how a gown would fit, that I should go with her to the dressmaker. Do you think it was any great pleasure to go to the florist's and to the caterer's to order flowers and French pastry for a dinner to be given after I left?"

"At any rate, you didn't have any expense," said practical Elsie.

"You forget the tips for the servants, and the presents for the children. Then Mrs. Sterling forgot her gold bag and had to borrow mine, saying, 'There's no one I'd rather ask than you.' Evidently five dollars is a mere trifle to her, for she didn't return the money I left in it and I never had the courage to give her a gentle reminder. That evening I was requested to show the cook how to make a fish timbale with mushrooms."

"Did they compliment you on your culinary ability?"

"Not nearly as much as they bemoaned the fact that I burnt one of the cook's favorite pans, and that she threatened to leave because strangers came into her kitchen."

"Did you remain long?" interrupted Elsie in a sympathetic tone.

"Too long. I was persuaded to telegraph Carl that it was an utter impossibility for me to keep a theater engagement with him."

"Why?"

"How could I refuse my cousin after all her kindness to me, when she had such a bad headache and I was the only one who was able to decorate the table for her birthday dinner the next day? Carl didn't believe my excuse and took Grace."

"Why, I saw Carl and Grace together again last night."

"Yes, I know he's been taking her ever since. Do you blame me for not accepting Mrs. Smith's invitation?"

We are glad to see you!

When the Ships Come In.

In Hawaii, the Philippines and Cuba one of the chief topics of interest to the islanders is the arrival and departure of steamers. Newspapers devote whole pages to these boat movements, to lists of the passengers, interviews with notables on board and stories of the voyage by members of the officers' staffs and crews. In fact the arrival of the evening train in a mainland country town holds no more interest for the residents than the maritime news has for the people of Honolulu, Manila and Havana. The Cuban capital has a new object of interest in this regard in the lately instituted daily air service between that city and Key West. The planes are of the United States navy scout type, each carrying eight passengers.

DEDICATION OF THE NEW SCHOOL

Auspicious Occasion Marked By Excellent Program. Large Crowd Attends.

Formal opening and dedication of St. Hilaire's splendid new school building was marked by appropriate exercises held at the building last Friday evening. The evening was fine and a large number of people from the outlaying districts took advantage of the occasion and were present. The exercises were opened by Pres. A. S. Wilson of the local board of education. He told of some of the difficulties encountered by the board in trying to maintain an up-to-date school in the old building. and some of the phases of the campaign put on to secure the new building. He also touched upon some humorous incidents connected with his school days and compared the schools of those days with the superior ones of today. Mr. Wilson was followed by Geo. A. Selke of the state department of education, who had been secured to deliver the dedicatory address. Mr. Selke, who is an authority on consolidated schools, had prepared a masterly address for this special occasion and his talk on the subject was easily the best ever heard in St. Hilaire. He told of "little red school house" days and of the handicap placed on rural children by reason of inferior schools. He told of the fight waged by the state department to get better schools; of the growth of consolidated schools in this state, and of reasons why the small rural one room school house was giving way to the more modern consolidated one. In speaking of the new building Mr. Selke remarked that "there may be larger school buildings in Minnesota, but there are none better." He lauded the district for building when they did, and expressed a belief that the people here would, in future years, look back and see that they had taken a big step forward when they decided to erect a modern building even though conditions at the time were possibly not of the best. Mr. Selke's whole address is worthy of reproduction,— it was so full of encouragement and good cheer

After Mr. Selke's address a very pleasing number was rendered by the high school chorus and a piano solo was rendered by Gudrun Grimsrud, both of which were greatly enjoyed by those present. At conclusion of the dedication program, County Agent McCann was called upon for a talk on community clubs. He spoke on what had been, and could be accomplished by such organizaions and stated that he thought this community was in position to maintain a fine club in case organization work was pushed. At conclusion of his remarks a free for all discussion was opened at which time many spoke in favor of immediate organization. A committee of six was appointed to sound out sentiment in adjacent townships and a meeting date was set for Februray 11, at which time an organization will be perfected.

At conclusion of the program, all present were invited to inspect the building from boiler room to roof and acquaint themselves with its many good features. The building, which is 58x92, has a capacity for 205 pupils. The ground floor is below grade, not being used as class rooms, and contains a fine, small gymnasium, a manual training room, drawing room, toilets, fan room and boiler room. The fuel room projects beyond the northeast corner of the building. The boiler and fan room are both under the building and are both of fireproof construction. A low pressure boiler wtih a capacity of 8000 square feet furnishes heat for the building and also heats the fresh air which is delivered into the building by a plenum fan at the rate of 30 cubic feet per minute. The water supply is from a deep well in the basement and is pumped into a pressure tank by an automatic electrical driven pump. The first floor contains four grade class rooms each with a seating capacity of 35 pupils, a nice, airy library, and a teachers' rest room. The second floor has a large assembly room with a recitation room at one end so arranged that both may be combined when necessary to use it for public meetings. On this floor is also the principal's office, another recitation room, large domestic science room, laboratory with adjoining dark room and store room. Electric fire alarms are provided on all three floors. The entire building is finished in oak, and all floors are birch with exception of the basement which is concrete.

After inspection of the building, the guests were invited into the assembly room where light lunch was served to all.

Red Cross Meeting

A regular meeting of the Red Cross was held Monday night. It was decided at this meeting to put on a course of Home Nursing as soon as a nurse is available, the exact date to be given later. The course consists of 15 lessons, one each day. Expense of the course will be met by the chapter, the only expense to students being a book which will cost sixty cents and is retained by the owner. Any woman or girl in this vicinity is eligible to take a course, and full details can be had from any member of the chapter.

Embroidery Ancient Art.

The art of embroidery has been practiced from time immemorial—it is said to be as old as the art of dressing. The mummy clothes of ancient Egypt show the earliest extant embroidery and the "pome-granates of blue and purple and scarlet" of the book of Exodus were of embroidery. The art reached its height in the early middle ages. In Greece and Rome laws were made to moderate its use, but without success. The most distinguished artists did not count it condescension to make the designs from which the highest ladies in the land executed their embroideries. No workers were more skilled in the art than the English.

The next number on this season's lyceum course to appear here will be Ernest Powell, one of the best knwon lecturers appearing on the lyceum platform in this country today. The deceased, who at the time of death was 68 years of age, came to this country 37 years ago, residing at Joliet, Ill., until four years ago when she came to this place with her family. Besides her husband, she leaves a family of seven grown children, who are: Gustave, of Thief River Falls, Carl, of Rockford, Ill., Iver, Alfred and Philip of St. Hilaire, Ernest of Joliet, Ill., and a daughter, Mrs. Thos. Tinsman of Grand Forks, N. D., besides a host of relatives and friends. Funeral services were held Sunday last, and interment was made in the Swedish Tarna cemetery east of town.

HELPED PAY AMERICA'S DEBT

How Mrs. Monroe Was Instrumental in Saving the Life of Madame Lafayette.

An interesting sidelight on history lies in the story of how the wife of James Monroe, fifth President, saved the life of Madame Lafayette at the time Monroe was American ambassador to France. Lafayette himself was in prison in Germany, and kept in a foul dungeon. Mme. Lafayette had been seized by the Revolutionists, and was confined in the prison of La Force, and a date had been set for her execution. The Monroes were very much alive to the great debt America owed the young aristocrat, and Mrs. Monroe determined to do what she could.

She ordered the state coach of the embassy, with its flaring coat of arms, to deliver her to the doors of the prison of La Force, and once there, calmly requested an interview with the unfortunate prisoner. An interview with a person sentenced to the knife was unheard of, but the dawning power of the United States was such that the officials dared not refuse the request of the ambassador's wife. A few words were exchanged between the women, and Mrs. Monroe drove away. The next morning she was liberated, the French Revolutionists fearing to execute her, and desiring thus to secure the friendly attention of the new nation. It was a daring thing to do, for the results might have been disastrous and all sorts of international complications might have arisen.

Why, of Course.

Pop Moore, relates Louge, believes in telling children the truth, and when his youngster heard him read the weather prediction and inquired how the weather man knew, Pop laid aside his paper and explained the best he could. He told of the charts, the instruments, the telegraphic reports, etc. "And that's how he finds out the weather for tomorrow." he finished. The kid listened intently, sat thoughtful for a few minutes, and then earnestly inquired: "And then does he tell God?"

Remorseful Ghost.

A pathetic story is told of the ghost of Bisham abbey. It is said that the wife of Sir Thomas Hobby was unnaturally severe with her son, who, it seems, had a peculiar aversion to writing, and in his obstinacy would wilfully blot his copybooks. One day his mother, enraged at his perverseness, lost her self-control and beat the poor boy so unmercifully that he died from his injuries. Since then one of the bedrooms in the abbey has been haunted by the specter of the cruel woman, who glides through the chamber in the act of washing the bloodstains from her hands.

It is stated that some years ago, when an old window shutter of the sixteenth century was removed, "a packet of antique copybooks of that period was discovered pushed into the wall between the joists of the skirting, and several of these books, on which young Hobby's name was written, were covered with blots."

CAT SCORED USUAL VICTORY

Japanese Legend Merely Another Feather in the Cap of the Ever-Conquering Feline.

There is an enchanting story told by the Lady Sei Shonagon, a beauty of Japan of nine centuries past, of the emperor's favorite cat — herself a spoiled beauty. She had received a cap of honor and had been raised to the third rank of nobility, with the title of Wiyobu-no-Ototo, or "Chief of the Female Attendants," and was a cat of many graces. Unfortunately, on a day of disobedience, her lady-in-waiting summoned the emperor's dog, Okinamaru, to startle her into good behavior. He barked obediently, and the cat dashed madly behind the screen, where his majesty sat at breakfast, and sought refuge in his arms. The emperor, much shocked, sent for the lord high chamberlain, and pronounced sentence on poor Okinamaru. A thrashing and exile! The Lady Sei describes him as hitherto a happy dog and much esteemed. But a short time before he had been carried in a procession in a willow litter, with peach blossoms and hollyhocks on his head! He was now an outcast on dog island, "and none so poor to do him reverence." He may possibly have found life easier without the hollyhocks, but it is interesting to see that the eternal cat is victorious as ever. The dog is vanquished; the lady-in-waiting ruined, and the cat lies in the emperor's lap and purrs. So was it always; so will it ever be, writes L. Adams Beck in Asia Magazine.

Isn't the Law Wonderful!

A Belgian paper tells of a woman living at Mons who is denied a marriage license because she does not know her name, age or birthplace and therefore "has no legal existence."

The case is analagous to that of a man named Mahony who was hanged some years ago. When the prison physician pronounced him dead, the body was cut down and delivered to the relatives. Life was not extinct, however, and a few hours later the man was quite himself again. He was shot by a murderer some time afterward, but the assassin could not be brought to justice because, as the court said, "Mahony was legally dead, and therefore could not be killed subsequently by anybody."

Book as Granaries.

* * * Books are the great civilizers of the race, the storehouses of knowledge, the granaries of intellectual food. Therefore to designate in all candor which books of those that are made are, indeed, public pabulum, and which are straw; carefully and conscientiously to examine and explain, one man for the million, the publications which are conducive or detrimental, in whole or in part, to learning and progress, is one of the most important and noblest works in which man can be engaged, while to prostitute the powers requisite for such a position is one of the basest.—Hubert Howe Bancroft.

A Woman's Privilege

By LILY WANDEL

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"What you need is a permanent wave," exclaimed Melba, viewing her friend's long but somewhat stringy looking hair.

Ilsa put down her hairbrush and turned a thoroughly frightened face to the light. "Never! Don't even suggest such a thing to me. Didn't I go with Mrs. King when she got hers, and didn't I see with my own eyes what the poor thing endured for five horrible hours? No, not I." And began to brush energetically.

"But think of the bliss afterward!" tempted Melba.

"But, Melba—why go through such torture? Mrs. King said she really thought the top of her head was coming off, as though they had built a fire on her scalp! Not for me. I'm not that ridiculous and vain!"

Melba raised her eyebrows disapprovingly. "I suppose you are getting dressed to get out with Larry tonight as usual."

"Yes, why do you ask?" dabbing her face with cold cream and then carefully massaging it in.

"Oh, nothing," answered Melba lightly, getting up from her chair and walking aimlessly about the room. She stopped before a picture of Ilsa taken some ten years ago. "You were going with Larry Philmore when this was taken, weren't you?"

"Oh, I suppose so," snapped Ilsa, visibly annoyed.

"It's a wonder you two wouldn't get married. My goodness, Ilsa, you are thirty or more!"

Ilsa began to rub off the cold cream vigorously so that her face was a bright red.

Melba sauntered back and dropped in her chair next to the dressing table. "Ilsa, are you letting that Larry Philmore string you along? Don't be foolish, child, get him to propose; don't waste your best years on a man who may drop you!"

"But Think of the Bliss Afterwards!"

"Melba! How can you!" Tears shot into Ilsa's eyes and she fumbled helplessly for a handkerchief.

"Oh, I know it; no one needs to tell me," came the muffled reply.

With a quick rush of understanding Melba flung her arm around Ilsa's shoulder and pressed her cheek against the other's. "My dear, my dear," she whispered softly, and then straightened up, full of purpose and action. "Make him propose! Make yourself so charming, so pretty that he will be afraid of losing you!"

"Why, Melba, you talk as though I go around like a frump! Don't I spend really more than I can afford on clothes and cosmetics?" She made an including gesture toward the bulging wardrobe and the double line of bottles and jars on her dressing table. "My complexion is good, you'll admit, and I have kept that tendency to a double chin away, haven't I?"

"Yes," admitted Melba slowly, "that's true, and you do dress very smartly; your hats are peaches, but—"

"But what?" demanded Ilsa, eyeing her suspiciously.

"Your hair—"

"I knew it! Your old permanent wave again! No, and a hundred times, no! I won't be tortured for Larry Philmore or the king of England!"

"My goodness! Don't fly in such a temper right away. Your hats would look better, believe me. Last time I saw you out with Larry it was pouring rain, and your hair—"

"Oh, be still. If you knew how sick I am of all this," she swept her hand over the top of the dressing table, "this continual battle to keep pretty and young! I'm sick of it, Melba, just tired of it," passion crept in her voice, "ready to quit! Throw it all to the wind—Larry and all!"

"Ilsa Steele! Are you silly? Now don't do anything rash. You and Larry are so suited to each other—"

"Yes, I will, too! I don't care a rap about looks or dress or anything! I'm just sick and tired of all this fussing! had a letter last week from Aunt bigail in Seven Points, she's terribly usy with jelly-making and she hintl wanting help. And, Melba, I'm oing; yes, I am, too. Going out here and live in a gingham houseress and make jelly and feed the hickens. And see those bottles and rs? Not a one goes along, not one. ot even a curling iron, nor a hair et. Not a georgette dress with all the illion snaps and beads! I don't are if I look forty either, or fifty! nd if Larry wants a younger girl hy—" but her voice shook a little, et him go to it!"

Melba rose in great consternation. For goodness sakes be sensible. You on't do anything of the kind." And s Ilsa obstinately shook her head, 'you'll regret it, I know you will. Why not try the permanent wave, you an't tell—"

Ilsa gave her friend a little eneretic shake. "Don't you dare say armanent wave to me again!"

"There's no harm in making one's self as pretty as one can. Don't very sedate people help nature along with —for an instance—false teeth?"

But Ilsa was dragging out a suitase. "I'm going tonight."

Two weeks of jelly-making and pickling had passed at Aunt Abigail's prim garden abiaze with bright flowers. When the day's preserving was over, Ilsa, still in her housedress, would take a pad and pencil and go out under the trees and scribble a etter to Melba.

"It's beautiful here," she wrote "only I'm so tired from standing in the hot kitchen all day long. Somehow or other I keep glancing at the itchen door every now and then as if I were expecting somebody. Now, if this were a story, some bright morning, when I stood over the stove with a face as red as a turkey, the door would open and in would step Larry! He would be quite overcome with joy and delight of seeing me in a stained housedress and my powderless nose would bring tears of happiness to his eyes! He would clasp me in his arms, jelly spoon and all and propose on the very spot! And then he would spring the astounding fact that he owned the next farm, a peach! Bought it five years ago and was afraid I wouldn't like to be a farmer's wife or something like that. Unfortunately this is not a story. No one comes to the kitchen door but an occasional tramp! Aunt Abigail makes very pointed remarks about old maids, and today she told me my hair looked a sight, no wonder I didn't get a husband! Nevertheless, she likes me and wants me to make my home with her and I really think I will."

In the morning came Melba's usual chatty letter. "And by the way, I saw your Larry last night on the Roof Garden. He certainly is a fine-looking chap and the lady who was with him was really quite stunning and she had such pretty hair, curling out from under her hat."

"Aunt Abigail" Ilsa came in the kitchen with pale cheeks. "I just had a letter—it's very urgent—I've got to catch the noon train—I may come back again, I'm not quite sure."

Two days later Ilsa with trembling fingers lifted the telephone receiver to her ear and gave the operator Larry's number. In reply to her invitation he promised to be there in an hour.

Ilsa met him in the hall.

Larry Philmore came in his usual brisk, matter-of-fact way, but he stopped and stared at Ilsa, then he drew her slowly toward him and kissed her very tenderly. "I really did not know how much I missed you, until now," he said softly. She led him gently to the library davenport.

"Ilsa," he confessed after a while, "I took Molly Davis out a few times when you were away. I thought she was so smart looking—I admired the way her hair looked, but dear, now that I see you I know what a fool I was! Why, your hair—Ilsa, queer I never noticed before, it waves so beautifully and shines—it's exquisite! Ilsa, I can't miss you again—couldn't we surprise our friends, dear? There's the Little Church Around the Corner."

And when he released her from his ardent embrace, "Dear, what makes you so attractive today, your pretty hair? Are you doing it a new way, what makes it ripple so?"

"I think," lied Ilsa softly, "it was the country air."

These Unnecessary Warnings.

Excellent young women have chopped ice and frozen sherbet behind closed doors because they do not want to be told again to be sure not to get the ice all over the back piazza. Certain warnings go with certain projects as inevitably as rubbers with the rain. The practical mother has so often found the warnings necessary, that the mere sight of the act produces the formula by rote.

Model sons and daughters should accept these hints with gratitude, thus avoiding all friction, however minor. But rather than be advised to do that which they were planning to do already, the most loyal of daughters will resort to clandestine measures and go stealthily with the ice pick as with a poniard beneath a cloak.

This annoys an affectionate and capable mother very much. And she has a right to be annoyed, has she not? After all, it is her ice pick.—Frances Lester Warner in the Atlantic Monthly.

His One Chance.

"I believe," said the impatient man as he put aside the telephone, "that I'll go fishing."

"Didn't know you cared for fishing."

"I don't ordinarily. But it's the only chance I have of finding myself at the end of a line that isn't busy."—Boys' Life.

United States Has Many That Are Inexpressibly Dear to the Hearts of the People.

This old Plymouth church belongs to the noble dead, to the living only as trustees, but by way of pre-eminence it belongs to the generations that are as yet unborn. Civilization journeys forward partly on books, partly upon the memorial days of great men, who are builders of the state, upon organized laws and finally upon historic buildings.

No one can fully value the influence of the Temple in Jerusalem upon the Hebrew state. In like manner the Parthenon was like an invisible teacher, whose strong hands shaped the plastic soul of the Greek race. There are half a dozen buildings in Great Britain, including Westminster abbey and St. Paul's, and to take those buildings out of England's life would be like taking the intellect out of man's body.

The people of the United States have but a brief history, only three centuries, but they have Independence hall, Mount Vernon, that shaft at Gettysburg, Faneuil hall, Old South church, Lincoln's house and shrine at Springfield, and old Plymouth church, priceless shrines for the American people.—Newell Dwight Hillis.

When the chairman of the inspection board announced the closing of the polls, Ainsworth, who stood just within the rail, was conscious of a quick thrill of anxiety and doubt. His reason told him that his plurality of a year before was an earnest of success, but his instinct warned him of failure. He relit his cigar and leaned against the railing with studied carelessness. He wished to keep his face expressionless during the count. Directly opposite him stood the Tammany captain, and he knew that the Tammany inspectors were watching him as they prepared their tally sheets. He could suppress any sign of exultation if he won; he meant to steel himself against visible disappointment if he lost. For him the result in this one district would tell the story of the election.

The room was tense with excitement as the formalities prescribed by law were complied with.

The candidate watched the opening of the final ballot listlessly. He knew that he was beaten.

At the club house he pushed his way through the crowd. "It is all over," he said.

District captains reported at intervals, some by telephone, some in person, handing over their slips with brief comment.

"It was simply h—l in the Eighteenth," announced one as he gave the secretary his report.

The telephone rang again, and the secretary turned to Ainsworth,

"Your wife wants to speak to you."

Ainsworth spoke into the transmitter.

"We will postpone our winter in Albany," he said. "The people don't appreciate us."

The light tone and the jest were for those who stood around him. The candidate knew that no assumption of carelessness would deceive the woman at the other end of the wire.

Ainsworth resumed his seat on the edge of the table.

"You were going to take her with you?" asked the leader.

Ainsworth nodded.

"Too bad," said the leader, relapsing into silence.

Presently it was certain that the state had been saved by the unexpected magnitude of rural majorities.

The streets were quiet as Ainsworth walked home. He listened curiously to his own foot-falls, and noted as if for the first time familiar buildings and shop windows.

His wife met him in the hallway.

"Dearest, poor dearest!" she said, with her arms around him.

They went into his study and sat down at his table, pushing an accumulation of papers from him distastefully. His wife sat opposite, watching him.

"Well?" she said presently.

"I'm just simply beaten," he answered. "That's all."

"Badly?"

"Pretty badly. I don't know just how much. It doesn't make any difference."

There was a long silence. He noticed a wistful look in her eyes, and came across to her.

She smiled—rather curiously, he thought—and stopped him with a tender hand over his mouth.

"Hush!"

"But you will."

"How blind you are!"

"Blind?"

"Yes. Shall I tell you the truth?"

"Of course."

She walked away from him a little, still looking at him and smiling curiously.

"Then listen," she said. "If it were not for your disappointment, I should be glad, glad, glad! What do I care for a winter in Albany, or anywhere, when I am not a part of your life? Oh, you don't know how I have prayed to keep from wishing, hoping, that you would lose! I wanted to have you win, because your heart was bound up in it; but I—oh, I only wanted you! I am a foolish woman, perhaps, but I was jealous of your other life."

She was sobbing passionately as Ainsworth caught her in his arms.

"Dearest," he said humbly, "I never knew!"

"No, you never knew."

"And you cared so much?"

"Do I care? Oh, my husband!"

The silence which followed was broken by the sound of bare, tiny feet in the hallway. A curtain was parted doubtfully, and a small voice cautiously announced:

"I got lonesome, muvver. I'm a-comin' in!" And then a joyous "Oh, there's my papa!"

Seated on a beloved but unfamiliar knee, a curly head nestling against the defeated candidate's waistcoat, an anxious inquiry followed:

"Has you got to go in just a minute, papa?"

"No, darling. Why?"

"I was 'fraid you had to. I've been wishin' I'd see you, ever so long!"

Half an hour later the door-bell rang, though it was long past midnight. The child was fast asleep in Ainsworth's arms.

"I saw your light as I was turning in," said the visitor, "and, late as it is, I could not keep from coming to tell you how we all feel about your defeat. It is simply a shame."

The candidate stared blankly.

"Oh," he said, after a little, "you are speaking of the election. I had forgotten all about it!"

The St. Hilaire School Review

The new class in Sociology was started a week ago Monday. This subject takes the place of Civics.

Two fire drills were given Thursday last week. There is still chance for improvement in speed. Let's make it!

Judging by present appearances, the girls will have a REAL basket ball team this year. They have been practicing earnestly, and we are in hopes of seeing them schedule a game soon if at all possible.

Pet Expressions

Mr. Johnson: "Lines straight!"
Miss Forbes: "Quiet!"
Miss Anderson: "Let's hear your theme."
Tessie: "Why?"
Margaret: "It was too."
Anna: "Oh, I know!"
Lulu: "Yes, I guess."
Alice: "Well—"
Hulda: "Say—"
Hervey: "Gowan!"
Francis "Aw—".

The boys' basket ball team is planning a victory for Friday night, Feb. 11, and they are leaving nothing undone in the way of practice to make it a lively affair. You want your team to win,—turn out!

We acknowledge a pleasant visit from Mr. George A. Selke last Friday. In the afternoon he gave a talk in the high school assembly. The message was full of meaning, and Mr. Selke presented it in such a way that it was pleasant, interesting and instructive.

"We are determined to win the Greenbush game."

The Team.

The ocean is deep,
The hils are steep,
Some rivers are deep, but oh,
They're nothing like something I know.

It gives me a creep,
And I laugh till I weep
O'er the things that we say
In class every day.

Some wood is solid,
Some stones are hard,
But compared with this
They're as soft as lard.

It puzzles my brain,
And gives me a pain
Just to take a good look
At my Sociology book.

"There are larger schools in the state of Minnesota, but there are none better."—From Mr. Selke's dedication address, Jan. 28.

A large number of people attended the dedication exercises last Friday evening. The president of the local school board addressed the audience first and was followed by Mr. Geo. A. Selke of the State Department of Education who delivered the dedication address. County Agent McCann talked on the organization of a community club for this community. The Girl's High School Chorus sang several songs between the speeches and after the closing number the people were given opportunity to look over the building in detail and free lunch was served later.

Sassiety Notes

Leo, Howard and Francis have advanced to the "front ranks" in English II class.

Howard purchased a new pencil last week.

Leo wore a green tie one day.

Fred was seen on a load of hay.

Max is flashing a new stick pin.

Nels was seen out late one evening.

WHEN PRICES REACH THE VERY BOTTOM

WE all want to buy when the prices are lowest. This is human nature and good business. But how are you to tell when the bottom has been reached?

A general knowledge of conditions in the lumber business, the known shortage of buildings (the country is at least two years behind in its building program) and the fact that lumber prices are almost to prewar levels, has convinced us that there is nothing to be gained by waiting.

It is our belief that lumber prices have reached the bottom and we are placing orders for spring stock. We are buying all the material we expect to use during the coming building season.

The man who places his orders now will get the benefit of Low Prices, Promp; Deliveries and Good Service.

RELICS OF AN ANCIENT RACE

Important Discoveries, Which Will Be Carefully Investigated, Recently Made in Oregon.

Relics more important than any previously uncovered have been dug up in the Big Eddy district along the Columbia river, in Oregon, where evidences of an ancient Indian civilization have just been found. The burial ground which has been revealed by highway excavations is proving more extensive than at first supposed.

So important is the discovery considered that the state highway commission has given orders to proceed with great care with the work and to save all relics.

An entire wagonload of relics was taken to The Dalles for shipment to the Oregon Historical society in Portland. George H. Hines, curator of that organization, made a personal inspection of the excavations and pronounced the discovery the most important ever made in the Northwest. It is planned to bring to the society's rooms all the relics found so that they may be studied by scientists, who are expressing the greatest interest in the developments.

Stone utensils and copper ornaments comprise most of the objects so far discovered. Many human bones are uncovered, but they crumble to dust as soon as exposed to the air. Hundreds of sightseers and scientists are flocking to the scene of the work and it has been found necessary to keep the relics closely guarded to prevent their being carried away.

How to Know Poetry.

We literates have been taught to read poetry, and taught also that it is highly commendable to enjoy it. In order to know what kind of poetry ought to be especially enjoyed, we read other books, written by critics. In order to understand what the poetry that ought to be admired means, we read other books by professional grammarians. By the time we have finished this preparatory reading, we are somewhat confused. We are in doubt as to what poetry actually is, and how it differs from prose. In this predicament we fall back on the printer. If every line begins with a capital letter, we assume that it is poetry.—Samuel McChord Crothers in the Atlantic Monthly.

COMMUNITY CLUB MEETING FRIDAY

Every Resident Of This Section Invited To Be Present.

Plans are all completed for a big time here Friday night when a meeting has been called for organization of a community club. The matter was discussed to some extent at the school dedication exercises and much encouragement was found at that time. Friday evening there will be a basket ball game at the gymnasium and all who come in from the country will have an opportunity to witness that before the community club meeting opens. The latter will be held in the school auditorium, and able speakers will be present to assist, and to explain the whys and wherefores of community clubs. An organization of this kind has been sadly needed in times past, and formation of a good, live club now will be worth a good deal. Every person, young or old, is, or a least should be, interested in this move and it is to be hoped there will be a representative attendance.

Tentive plans are already made for several things that will mean much in a social way for the community and everybody should turn out and help boost the project along.

D. Patterson attended to business matters at Thief River, Monday.

Pete Anderson, former resident of St. Hilaire, who was millwright here until the mill left, and later was employed in the same capacity at the Bemidji mill, arrived last week for a visit with his brother, Andrew T. Anderson west of town.

Remember the basketball game Friday night.

Joe McAndress, a former St. Hilaire boy, is visiting with his brother, Mike, and other relatives here and at Thief River Falls. Joe is now buying grain in a town near Regina up in northwestern Canada, and he was called here at this time by the serious illness of his mother who resides at Thief River Falls.

To Farm Crop Show

Quite a number of people from this vicinity are at Crookston this week taking in the Farm Crops Show and live stock sales. For some unknown reason, the special train scheduled to run here Wednesday did not materialize so those who had planned to spend only one day at the Show did not get a chance to go. From all reports, the exposition this winter is a "humdinger."

Basketball Friday

The Greenbush high school basket ball team is coming Friday to play a return game with the local high school quintet. The locals lost to Greenbush by a narrow margin up there, and are planning strong on carrying off the honors on the home floor. The game will be a lively one, and all who can do so should attend to encourage the boys.

Misses Lilly Johnson, Eloise Forbes and Eleanora Anderson were at Thief River Falls between trains last Saturday.

Are you going February 11? Where? To the Communiy Club meeting. Are you going to join? Yes, let's go,—let's join, —let's boost it.

SAVE PIECES FOR PATCHES.

When the men have their suits made they should ask for pieces of the same goods; it is necessary when you have a tear or rip; when the trousers wear at the bottom you can face them with same; when torn at the knee you can patch them almost unnoticeably, saving you a pair of trousers. Save black lining of the old vests (which is so strong); when the lining of an overcoat is torn (especially sleeves) you can make it look like new and be pleased you saved a tailor's bill.

Mrs. A. Chelin was at Thief River Falls between trains, yesterday.

A baby son came arrived Friday to bless the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Ortleff.

Iver Johnson went Monday to Crookston to attend to matters in connection with some wood shipments he had made to that place. Incidently, he intended to have a look in at the Farm Crop Show.

E. W. Gallagher and family have moved from the Lardy residence on Water Street to the John Peterson place across the tracks. Mr. Lardy returned this week from Grand Forks and expects to occupy the place soon.

Mexicans Are Great Walkers.

There is a saying in Europe that the Spaniards are the champion walkers of the world, and certainly their descendants in America, the Mexicans, are the champions of the new world. Three nights every week there is a concierto in the main downtown plaza in Monterey and nearly all the Americans in town, including many big, husky transients on the way to or from Tampico, sit on the park benches and watch in wonder while the Mexicans walk.

All the young people in town, it appears, walk around and around and around that plaza, the boys in one direction and the girls in the opposite direction, while their parents and chaperons and a few aged people share the benches with the husky Americans.

India's Fertility.

India, more than half the size of Europe, has every variety of surface, climate and production. The contrast between the level monotony of the Great plain and the beautiful contours of the Milgiri and Pulney hills is no greater than that between the arid heat of Jacobabad and the polar frigidity of the Himalayas, or that between the palm groves of Cochin and the wheat fields of Lyallpur. The productivity of India extends over three zones—the tropical, sub-tropical and temperate, though on account of varying elevations, these do not always [illegible]

Remains of the old Skeie buildings which were partly torn down last fall and which have been more or less of an eyesore ever since, were removed from the lot this week.

A. F. Hall made a hurry up trip down to Keewatin on the iron range last week-end to attend to business matters and also to visit his brother, Art. He returned home Monday morning.

CREAMERY MEET IS HELD MONDAY

Decision Made To Build A New Modern Creamery The Coming Summer.

Annual meeting of the St. Hilaire Co-operative Creamery Ass'n. was held at the village hall Monday afternoon this week. Report of business done the past year was very satisfactory. The report shows the creamery has had a very successful run, and has paid the highest price for butterfat of any creamery in this vicinity.

All present officers were re-eleted without opposition. After considerable discussion, a decision was reached to build a new building on the company's downtown site, the coming summer. A committee was appointed to visit other modern plants in this part of the state and investigate their buildings with a view of deciding upon the best method of construction.

A liberal amount of stock was subscribed for at the meeting and more has since been taken.

There will be no difficulty in raising funds, so the matter of building awaits only a decision as to kind and size of structure.

Mrs. McNaney, who is keeping house for Mrs. Albert Kolp, this winter spent a few days at Thief River this week, visiting relatives and friends.

Glenn Shannon, who has been staying at Wylie, returned to Rolette, N. D., last Friday. He is a brother of William Shannon.

Miss Gertrude Hooper, who holds down a position as assistant matron at the Odd Fellow's Home at Northfield, arrived here Saturday to spend a vacation with her parents.

Start Something

GETTING READY isn't going. You have to start and keep going if you are going to get anywhere. The fast locomotives, automobiles and air planes have to start slowly. Air planes attain a speed of two miles per minute but that is not reached until they have been on the move some time.

The same thing applies to saving money and investing it where it will grow. If you want absolute safety make your deposits with your Home Bank. After you have accumulated a few hundred dollars you will be in position to make a payment on a home or start some business. Right there is where you "attain a speed of two miles per minute."

But you have to start today—not tomorrow.

PETRIFIED JEWELED LADY.

In the course of the excavations which are still being made at Pompeii, it is stated by the Tribune the body of a petrified woman has been discovered.

On the body were jewels of great value, including bracelets, necklaces and chatelaines, and it is assumed from this that their wearer belonged to the patrician class.

Especially remarkable among the jewels are two clasps, each composed of 31 pearls in a cluster. These clasps have both an artistic and an archeological value for nothing comparable with them had been found

A Silk Purse from a Sow's Ear?

"You can't make a silk purse from a sow's ear"—so runs the old saw. But in a very real sense the ancient phrase-maker was wrong; for, of swine you can make a silk purse—yes, a magic purse—which will provide all that makes for better country living. That is, you can—with Pure-Breds!

To swinemen, Pure-Breds have furnished funds for better clothes for the whole family, for debts that were long overdue, for automobiles, for modern home conveniences, for more land, for buildings, for travel, for college educations—for more leisure and greater happiness and contentment.

Farmers who have intelligently gone in already for Pure-Breds are enjoying these advantages now. More of the wise ones are falling rapidly into line. Now the way is open for you to get at least a Pure-Bred boar and grade up your herd.

When prices are down is the time to buy. If you have not yet started on the only basis that will make your swine herd certain to pay, you should join the procession right now. Let us show you what other farmers have accomplished with Pure-Breds—and how they did it.

You should read THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN articles about farmers who have found Pure-Breds to be the Aladdin lamp that makes farm life worth living. In it you will find much helpful information about every phase of agriculture, gathered by its staff of fifty trained observers. Only $1.00, either check or bill, will bring it to you every Thursday for a whole year—fifty-two big issues. THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN is helping us make this announcement. It has always been a good booster for Pure-Breds. We are glad to boost it.

This Monster Was Battler.

The curators of the Launceston and Tascanian museums have presented to the Royal Society of Tasmania the preliminary account of a nearly complete skeleton of a gigantic extinct monster, recently discovered in the pleistocene beds of Tasmania.

The animal was as large as the largest existing rhinoceros. The new discovery shows clearly that it was a rhinoceros-like animal, with a skull built for aggressive warfare, and at least one powerful horn on the snout. Evidence of the gigantic battles in which this animal engaged is to be found in the complete smashing and partial mending of the collar-bone, and in the crushing and subsequent repair of the bones of the nose and

PHILIP'S LOVE

By JACK LAWTON

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

Constance sat at the window waiting for Philip, but the happy expectancy in his coming was gone. Sadly the young wife wondered how long this life of strained indifference must go on. For surely Philip had grown indifferent in marriage, after his unabated devotion before. Constance looked back on the years before her marriage with a sigh. Philip, earning his way in her father's employ, had been a difficult lover, even now she was not sure that he would have asked his own heart's desire had she not tremulously prompted him. And might she not, after all, she thought with a catching of the breath, have read his heart aright?

Could it be that Philip had married her for pity? Truly, she had shown her heart to him, with all it's love. The fact of her father's wealth, and Philip's humble position had seemed such a foolish barrier between, but Philip in his stubborn pride had been unable to brook that barrier. So she had done it for him.

She remembered the night, with the starlight on the snow, and Philip's dear arm through her's, steadying her against the breeze, and when she looked up into his face to see there the pent up love of years, that love which Philip's brusque manner had resolutely denied, Constance half laughing, half crying, had challenged him to deny his love as she told of her own.

Now in the calm of her sitting room the madness of that hour came back to her with the memory of his eager surrender. Their walk together had been but an accident; Constance had stopped at her father's office and her father himself had put her into the forbidden Philip's care. The night was dangerously stormy, she would have to take the street car home, her father expected to be detained at the office and would need his own car there. So Philip was installed her escort.

Later Constance had married him against his own unselfish protestations. Stoutly she proclaimed her contempt for the luxuries of life as compared with the gift of love—and Philip accepted the gift.

Her father had not yet forgiven the misalliance; Philip was obliged to seek work elsewhere, and to begin at a lower rung of the business ladder. But Philip would rise, and Constance was happy until—that indefinable something came to fill her with strange apprehension.

She found Philip looking at her as time went on in a detached, speculative way, and all her merriment could not bring an answering smile. When later he took to working evenings at the office, Constance determinedly discouraged the ambition with the assurance that they could manage on his daily salary, and that she preferred his companionship to extra dollars. So, though Philip desisted, he was ill at ease during their evenings together, and Constance in her discouraging attempts to entertain on the rattling old hired piano, subsided after a while before his absorbed despondence.

Then Philip rising abruptly one evening, announced his intention of departing for the club. Constance had not heard of this club before, and was grieved by his desertion. Then as night after night passed in loneliness, she too cultivated an apparent indifference to match his own. But as the street lights flared out and she watched from her window, it seemed no longer she could bear this suspense.

If she had been mistaken in her reading of Philip's heart and he had married her through pity, she must know at once, and no longer impose herself upon him. Her eyes were wet with tears, as she started upon the walk to her husband's place of business. The air would calm her, she hoped, she knew that she would find Philip there, and alone. An office girl who responded to her telephone message told her that her husband would be delayed at least an hour. It was more than an hour later when Constance stepped from the elevator in the deserted corridor of the building, and as she entered an outer office she heard voices in the room within.

One voice was Philip's, nervously impatient, the other was her father's. "It was little enough to do," Philip was saying, "giving up a few weeks of comfort in order that I might buy a piano for Constance. And quite as fine a one as that you provided. If I cannot yet give to my wife all those things to which she was accustomed, some day in my great love for her I will.

"Yes," her father answered, "someday, after you have worked yourself to death bending over a desk until midnight, when you have left her repeatedly alone with that lie about spending your evenings at the club, then you may be able to restore to Constance those things which she willingly discarded—for yourself.

"It was a lucky chance that led me to drive down with my old friend Travers today—Travers who happens to have sold you that piano. And now, my boy, you had better come back to your old position with me, and you had better, both of you, come back to my lonely old heart. Love's a queer thing, you can't beat it."

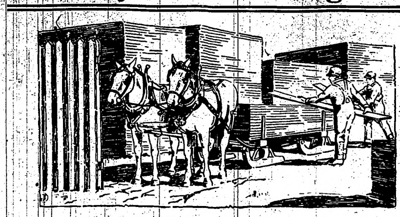
An Early Start is a Big Help



An early start on your house or barn is a big help. You can get the framing lumber and boards hauled while the sleighing is good or before the frost is out of the ground and be ready to put in the foundation as soon as spring comes.

No need to use up precious hours hauling lumber when you want to be ploughing or seeding, and your building will be completed or nearly so before you are busy pith harvesting or threshing.

There is sure to be plenty of material and workmen available; if you are ready to go ahead as soon as the frost is out of the ground.

An early start has many advantages. We are amply prepared to take care of your wants in the building line.

Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Fard Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in priee at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached an the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

COMMUNITY CLUB ORGANIZED HERE

Excellent Meeting At The School Building Last Friday Evening.

A large and enthusiastic crowd gathered at the school house last Friday evening for the purpose of organizing a community club. After a short program by school children the meeting was opened and A. F. Hall was chosen chairman, and Jas. A. Dahl, secretary. A draft of constitution and by-laws was read and accepted. Seventy six members were enrolled after the meeting and others who desire to join are invited to enroll before the next meeting which will be held Feb. 25. At this meeting permanent officers will be elected and a program will also be given. There is no membership fee connected with becoming a member of the club. The object of the organization is community betterment and it is desired to have a large enrollment in order that the entire community shall be represented in matters that effect the community as a whole. Regalar meetings will be held the last Friday of each calendar month. Lunch was served in the domestic science room after the meeting. Every resident of this community is invited to the next meeting and it is to be hoped a greater number will be able to get in from the outlaying districts.

In Appreciation

The undersigned wish to express their sincere thanks to all friends in this vicinity for the kindly and welcome assistance given us after the destruction of our home by fire.

Defeat Greenbush

The St. Hilaire high school basket ball team added another scalp to their fast growing collection last Friday evening when they met and defeated Greenbush here by a score of 27 to 6. The visitors drew first blood, scoring in the first quarter. The locals did not get their forward pass to working until in the second half after which they shot baskets in quick succession. At no time was there any danger of the visitors taking the lead as the ball was below the St. Hilaire basket most of the time. The visitors were a fine bunch of boys and they played a very clean game. Win or lose, the Greenbush team is always welcome in St. Hilaire.

Fine Lecture

Ernest J. Powell appeared here Monday night as the second number on this season's lyceum course. Mr. Powell gave a very interesting lecture touching upon a wide variety of subjects. He is a great exponent of higher education, and took occasion to compliment the community on progress made along educational lines. While waiting between trains, Mr. Powell visited the school and delivered a fine lecture to the school children.

J. C. Dahl and son, Ed., who went out to Idaho this winter, are enjoying the climate out there and Mr. Dahl's health has improved to a considerable extent.

Mrs. Henry Olsen is expected home this week from western Canada, where she was called by the serious illness of her father, Mr. Sorum, and who passed away shortly after her arrival.

The annual village elecion will take place March 8 this year. All who aspire to any of the soft snaps connected with village office, should file by the end of this month.

Joe McAndress, who has visited with relatives in this vicinity for the past two weeks, leaves this week for western Canada where he has a position as wheat buyer in a small town near Regina.

Miss Gertrude Hooper leaves today to resume her duties as assistant matron at the I. O. O. F. Home at Northfield, after spending a well earned two weeks vacation at her home here.

Prehistoric Graveyard Unearthed.

A prehistoric graveyard believed to be at least 2,000 years old has been unearthed near Stargard West Prussia, by German investigators under the direction of Professor Zakrewski. In one of the graves the excavators found six black urns and one red urn with white stripes filled with clay and ashes. Among the remains were some glittering substances which the investigators believe once had been adornments of prehistoric men and women.

Water "Cures" Old Belief

When you drink mineral water do you do it because you believe in its curative properties or because you are superstitious? Or both?

Extraordinary virtue has been attributed to the waters of pools and streams by nearly all peoples of all times. Among the modern Greeks today we find the remnants of the old belief that the water from the Grotto of Macedonia would cure all those who drank if they entered the cave with a lamp or torch in one hand and a pitcher in the other, filled the pitcher and left some scrap of clothing behind, going silently and not turning back from "being scared by the noises that ensued." And not only in Greece, but in England, there are many spots where the bushes around a certain pool will be hung thick with shreds of clothing left by those who came to be cured.

According to modern Greeks the mineral springs are under the protection of the Nereids, and the virtue of the water depends upon it being drunk in silence and with appropriate sacrifice. Old Church of England canons dating back to 1102 forbid the worship of wells without the bishop's permission, attributing the custom to heathenishness and a survival of the worship of the fountain as a symbol of the source of life. It was pointed out then that the naming of wells was as old as the days of the Patriarchs; that Abraham and Isaac are both spoken of in the Bible as having done so, but that worshipping them was a different matter [illegible]

Drainage Bill Passed

The Red Lake Drainage bill, now up before congress, was passed last week with minor amendments by the senate. The bill had previously passed the house, and it will now be again referred to that body for consideration of the amendments. Congressman Halvor Steenerson states there is no question whatever about passage by both branches of congress, and that it is now up to the president to sign which will put into motion a great project for draining a vast area of fine land in this part of Minnesota, and will incidently, insure establishments of a number of power dams on the river.

Lyceum Numbers

The two concluding numbers of this season's lyceum course will be the Gerhardt Concert Party which will be here this evening, and George Pearson, character portrayalist, who will be here Wednesday evening next week. Both these numbers are high class, and no one should miss seeing them. The last number is free to all holders of season tickets.

Bill Cuno, who is employed in a harness shop at Red Lake Falls, spent last week-end and first of this here with relatives and friends.

Editor E. R. Umpleby of the Greenbush Tribune, came down Friday evening to witness the basketball game between his home town and team the local lads. A very pleasant visit from Mr. Umpleby is acknowledged at this office.

Milton Soderberg, whose home is at Berkley, Calif., arrived here last week from Ohio for a visit at the home of his uncle, Fred Soderberg, and with numerous friends in this vicinity where the Soderberg family formerly resided.

Not Absolutely Washed.

Pycherley is a hard-hearted man. The spirit of Christmas never enters his body; and, indeed, if he has any particularly unpleasant intelligence to convey, he generally manages to save it up for Christmas time.

His wife, however, is different, and last Christmas entered the dining room with a troubled look.

"Oh, John," she said, "Mary just swallowed a shilling! What shall we do?"

Mary, let it be said, occupies the position of maid-of-all-work in the Pycherley household.

"Do?" repeated the master of the house. "Well, I suppose we'd better let her keep it. She would have expected a Christmas box, anyhow."—London Tit-Bits.

PRIZE WINNERS AT CROOKSTON

Dreeland And Novak Bring Home Many Ribbons From Crookston Show.

This section of the country was well represented at the Farm Crops Show at Crookston last week and a number of fine ribbons, not to mention a nice bunch of cash prizes, were brought home by the exhibitors. James Dreeland of Wylie, exhibited his herd of prize winning Big Type Poland China hogs taking one first prize, one second, twelve third, one fourth, and one fifth. This is a most excellent showing when one considers this was won in competition with nine herds, and that Mr. Dreelsand is a comparatively new man at the game, having only been two years at it. His herd is credited with being the third best in the entire Red River Valley.

William Novak with his herd of ten Red Polled cattle won two Grand Championships, two Senior Championships, one Junior Championship, five Firsts and one second, which is a remarkable showing.

Various grain prizes were captured by others from this vicinity.

Basketball Friday

Friday evening this week the Erskine high school basketball quint will be here to play their return game with the local high school team. The latter lost at Erskine by a close score, which would have been closer still had they been given equal show with their opponents in matter of decisions. The locals have had a lot of practice, and have won a couple hard fought games since that time, and feel they are in shape to add a decisive victory to their string at this game. As it requires a very good attendance to meet expenses of bringing a visiting team here, the boys would like to see a good turn-out Friday evening.

Mrs. A. O. Kjorlien of Northwood, N. D., was a guest at the B. Theo. Johnson home here last week, leaving for home Saturday.

Vernie Peterson returned home Monday from Minneapoils where he took a buttermaker's short course at the university. He has resumed his position at the local creamery.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Patterson went Monday to Grand Forks to attend to business matters and visit with friends They returned home yesterday morning.

TRADING WITH THE CHINESE.

Our trade with China is increasing with leaps and bounds. The exports from Shanghai to the United States during the first six months of the present year were valued at $48,985,858 gold, an increase of $15,307,067 over the same period last year. Swift changes in values in the last year and the fluctuations of the rate of exchange are shown by the trade in raw silk. In the first six months of 1919, 2,389,611 pounds of raw silk, valued at $11,718,613, were shipped from Shanghai. In the first six months' period this year the quantity of silk shipped dropped to 1,394,613 pounds, but the value [illegible]

The most recent foreign-born colony to spring up in the United States is that of Maltese immigrants, who have settled in Detroit, Mich. Before the war there were less than 100 immigrants from the Island of Malta living in Detroit. Today, it is reported, there are more than 4,000.

The growth, while rapid, escaped notice until recently, when several hundred of the Maltese decided to organize a society for mutual acquaintance to keep alive the traditions of the home island and to better their conditions here.

Many Have Been Made, but Man Who Was "Chasing a Funeral" Takes First Place.

Haled before the judge of the traffic court and asked what he had to say against the charge made by the officer that he was exceeding the speed limit exceedingly, the arrested one offered as his excuse that he "was chasing a funeral," says a writer in the American Motorist.

Even in New York, where excuses are many and original, this was the limit, and the judge so intimated. The prisoner explained he was an undertaker, and that the funeral cortege had left the church before he noticed that the pallbearers had been forgotten, whereupon he grabbed the bearers and set out to overtake the funeral before it reached the cemetery. The judge admitted the novelty of the explanation, and in recognition thereof he said the fine could be only $15 [illegible]

DO NOT UNDERSTAND HEROISM

Why Certain Group of Authors Hold Odd Views Concerning Conduct of People in War.

Since the end of the war a certain group of authors have been vehemently asserting that all the actions of men and women during the struggle must be attributed to hysteria, remarks the London Express.

"Men were not heroic, they were merely high strung."

"Women did not weep for grief, but because of excitement."

So they go on, these sages, stripping memory of its solace, robbing mankind of its trust in mankind.

What is the reason?

What is behind the earnest desire to discredit their fellow beings?

It is because these authors did not grow with the war. The spectacle of men dying for an ideal throws out their whole scheme of thought.

In their books humanity is depicted as petty, vulgar, unclean and selfish. They cannot go on writing until they convince themselves that the greatness we all saw in human nature is a lie.

And they call what they write the real truth.

Old Fort Still Useful.

Less than half a century ago almost every American community west of the Mississippi was protected against Indian raids by a fort or stockade. Most of these structures have now fallen into dust, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. In southern Utah, however, is a stone structure, known as "Cove Fort," which was built in 1867, at the time of the Blackhawk-Mormon war, yet is today in a state of perfect preservation. It is now used, in fact, as a ranch house [illegible]

YOU CANNOT OWN A HOME IF YOU PERSIST IN PAYING RENT

"IF WE have started to pay for a home seven years ago, when we were first married, instead of paying rent, our home would be paid for now.

"And how much more pleasure we would have had during these seven years. Let's see, we have moved five times since we were married and would have moved again last fall if we could have found any place to go.

"The landlord knew we couldn't move, so he raised our rent $20.00 and we had to pay it.

If we only had done what the Johnson's did. You know Fred never made any more money than you did, but he borrowed some money and built a house when they were married and it is almost paid for now, while we have been paping the same amount each month for rent.

Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Fard Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in price at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached an the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

LOCALS WIN OVER ERSKINE QUINT

High School Basketeers Add Another Victory To Their String.

The St. Hilaire high school basket ball team proved itself a fast working organization last Friday night when they took the Erskine quint into camp by a score of 23 to 4 in Erskine's return game played at the local gym. The game opened fast and furious and continued at that pace. St. Hilaire scored first which was followed by a score for Erskine in the first quarter. The visitors seemed unable to fathom the intricate floor work of the local boys who scored almost at will. The first half, with E. O. Burkee as referee, closed with St. Hilaire maintaining a comfortable lead. The second half, refereed by Supt. Randolph of Erskine, netted the latter team only one basket while the locals ran their score up to 23. The local lads played much the superior game thruout, and were in no danger of losing at any stage of the game.

Prior to the high school game, two teams of local high school girls put on a twenty minute session which resulted in a score of 4 for the victors to nothing for the losers.

A letter received this week from Erick Anderson, a former resident of this section and who now resides at Shaunaven, Canada, states that he and family are getting along nicely. Mr. Anderson states they are having a very fine winter, and so far have not fed any stock in the barn, the weather being so mild that the stock has been out every day. They have not found it necessary to lay up their car either on account of cold weather. Mr. Anderson states the crop last year was good, wheat yielding from 25 to 45 bushels per acre, and that the country around where he is, is making great progress.

The local Red Cross Chapter received word last week that their application for a nurse had been granted and that the nurse would be here next Monday ready to start classes in home nursing. Here is a chance for any woman or girl to become proficient along those lines without expense. Anyone interested should see either Mrs. Martz, Mrs. Bjerken or Mrs. O. Gunstad for full particulars. It is important that all who wish to join the class should enroll before the class starts wich is Monday, Feb. 28.

Fine Entertainment

The best number thus far on this year's lyceum course was Louis Gerhardt and Concert Party who appeared here last Thursday evening. Mr. Gerhardt is an excellent singer, impersonator and also a first class violoncellist. Mrs. Gerhardt excelled as pianis and character impersonator. The third member of the party, a tenor singer, was unable to fill his date, and a young lady violinist substituted. The program consisted of songs, instrumental selections and character sketches. Every member of the party was an artist and the entertainment put on was easily the best of its kind that has been presented here for years. The Gerhardt party are royal entertainers and they will be welcome here at any future date.

PROMINENT MEN SPEAK FRIDAY.

At Big Meeting Of Dairymen To Be Held In Thief River Falls.

Mr. W. A. McKerrow, State Leader of Livesock and Dairy Extension located at the University of Minnesota who is also secretary of the Central Shippers Association, Secretary of the Minnesota Dairy Council and recently appointed on the National Committee of Seventeen for the investigation of production and marketing will speak to a large audience in the Auditorium in Thief River Falls on Friday, February 25th, at 12:30 p. m.

Mr. B. T. Scott, Secretary of the Minnesota Holstein-Friesian Association will also be on the program at the same time. He will emphasize the importance of using good creamery butter and other dairy products rather than butter substitutes which has a tendency to reduce the dairy profits of the state. The meeting is called at 12:30 p. m. in the Auditorium at Thief River Falls so as to give the speakers time to finish their talks and take the Electric line to Goodridge where a Goodridge Community Club holds ther annual community club celebration on the evening of the 25th of February.

Seldom, if ever, has the county had the opportunity to hear two men so well qualified and informed to give talks on any phase of agriculture, livestock and dairy industries. No admission fee is charged, therefore we should be able to pack the Auditorium at Thief River and the school house in Goodridge to the fullest capacity. You will miss a rare opportunity if you fail to be present at one of these meetings.

In a letter received this week from Ed Carlson at Morganville, Kansas, he states the leaves are beginning to bud down there and that winter wheat is looking fine. Mr. and Mrs. Carlson are now nicely settled in their new home and are making preparations for a busy summer.

We have come to the opinion that the use of phosphate fertilizer should be given a trial on our Pennington County lands, and will keep on hand from now on during the spring and early summer a stock of what is known as Acid Phosphate Fertilizer. We can furnish this in large or small quantities and at reasonable prices.

ODD NAMES FOR NEW COLORS

Pimento Red and Tangerine Yellow Are Among Others in the List This Year.

"The bride wore honeydew tulle, with pimento trimmings, tastefully set off by an endive veil. Chippendale shoes and bamboo stockings added an unusual touch to the costume."

Yes, it's going to be a hard life for the society editors, remarks the Louisville Courier-Journal. They'll have to write descriptions like the paragraph above when the 1921 style colors arrive. After becoming proficient they should be able to get work writing nice things to put under the beautiful fairyland pictures of the seed catalogues.

Really, there's no exaggeration.

An official statement from the Textile Color Card association of the United States, which co-operates with the associations of clothing manufacturers in bringing out new shades, gives a list of new colors which reads like a combination garden guide, sport page and geography.

There are 66 "standard" colors for silks, 12 for woolens and 10 for shoes.

Most of them are gay and festive, such as pimento red, tangerine yellow, oasis green and resolute blue. However, browns also will be popular. Some of the shades will be caramel, bamboo, raffia and Mexican. Copper browns will be known as Navajo, Algonquin and Mohawk.

The Tip-Hunter's Guide.

Speaking of tips and tipping, a New York bellhop not long ago formulated a set of rules, a few of which we give below:

Don't waste time on "big bugs."

Shower attention on women; if they tip at all, they tip liberally.

Don't persecute tightwads; shame them with faultless service.

Play the honeymooners hard; newlywed men like to make a splurge before their brides.

Don't act ugly when a guest departs without tipping you. Have a heart! Perhaps the office cleaned him out.—Boston Transcript.

POINTS OUT HUSBAND'S DUTY

Writer Insists No Man May Stand in the Light of His Wife's Domestic Ambitions.

"Puzzled husband" writes us that he is sorely tried by his wife's ambition to bake the family bread, and other things. His domestic affection and spirit of chivalry will not permit him to tell his wife the truth—that the bread is almost as heavy as a paving stone and quite as indigestible. So he goes to work every morning with a heavy heart and an even heavier stomach, and is bedeviled with gripes and abdominal pains all day, Greene M. Farley writes in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Not only that, but his wife is a constant reader of domestic science departments and she uses him as an experiment station. This last week, he says, he had biscuits that would do for sinkers on a fish line and an angel cake that could not be differentiated from old putty. The heartrending feature is that she asks him with a bright smile how he likes it all, and he cannot find it in his breast to tell the truth about it; so he lies frankly and wholeheartedly.

All this is getting on his nerves and on his stomach and on his conscience. In the course of a little time he feels his life insurance is going to be due.

Should he tell her the truth, or should he suffer in silence and let her go ahead and collect the life insurance?

If life is worth anything to him he might conclude to tell her the truth and let her go ahead and procure her divorce. She might find a second husband with a cast-iron digestive apparatus and the present husband ought not to stand in the way of his wife's career as a domestic scientist.

Czechoslovak Forests.

A novel feature of Czchoslovak forest development is the principle that the annual growth must equal or exceed the annul cut. This is a wise and farsighted policy. It is estimated that 6,600,000 cubic meters of fire wood and 9,400,000 cubic meters of commercial timber are cut yearly. The quantity used for fuel during and since the war will be greatly reduced, in the very near future, through stimulated production of bituminous coal, lignite and oil. At the prevailing prices for lumber competent authorities estimate the value of the annual timber cut to be about $120,000,000.

DESIRED TO TAKE THE VEIL

Oldest Daughter of Thomas Jefferson Attracted by Quiet Life Within Convent Walls.

Martha Jefferson, oldest daughter of Thomas Jefferson, third President of the United States, came near to being a catholic sister. She was a student at the school of Abbaye de Panthemont at the time the French Revolution was in progress. The daring and flippant infidelity of the French frightened and disgusted her, and she clung to the calm and serene life of the convent with all her strength. Her mother had taught her in the ways of the Church of England, but the surroundings at the school overreached this, and she decided to become a nun.

She wrote to her father asking his permission to adopt the veil. No answer came for several days, and then Jefferson appeared in person. He greeted the girl with a tender smile, interviewed the abbess, and then came out and told the girl to pack her things. Her school life was ended at that moment, and the next day she was introduced to society and made the mistress of her father's household. She declared years afterward that neither she nor her father had ever alluded to the subject by a single word from that day on.

"With remorse. He regrets his weakness."

"Sorry, young man, but that kind of play doesn't go. I'm busy."

"I forgot to tell you that the minister is already married to another woman."

Building a Community

Several years ago the Rev. A. W. Phillips was placed in charge of a small rural church. The church was poor, the community was poor, and the outlook was discouraging. The minister, however, was keen. After careful investigation he decided that a pure-bred community was the way out. The pure-bred idea took root, half a dozen progressive members bought good animals and the rejuvenation of the community began.

The farmers in this community became known as pure-bred hog specialists, and buyers flocked in. The community effort achieved what no one was able to accomplish alone. These people now have a fine church, a splendid school, good roads and more modern homes.

They have raised their community out of the mud through intelligent coöperative effort. Hundreds of other communities might do likewise. A large number already have. Why not push our community along further with pure-bred hogs? Now is the time to buy, when all prices are down.

THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN concludes from its extensive investigations that there is no more profitable farm practice than concentrating on one good breed. We are glad to endorse this and also to commend THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN to you. You will find it profitable in your business and of great interest to every member of your family. In these days of national readjustment it is a vital need to farmers, for it fights for them and is big enough to make its efforts count. It costs only one dollar a year—52 issues. HE HAD LEARNED SOMETHING

Christmas Incident That Shows the Way of a Modern Maid With Her Victim.

He was a very nervous young man, but he was rather nice, and Elsie thought he was worth encouraging.

She allowed him to take her to tea, she deliberately chucked the slipper in his eye at "Hunt the Slipper," and she gave him a dance or two. Once or twice she sat down under the mistletoe, but he didn't seem to notice that.

At last when they were alone in a corner of a room, she stood long and insistently under the mistletoe hanging from a curtain pole of the bay window.

Then, very nervously, he pecked her face. She, of course, protested mildly; but as they seated themselves once more, most respectably on a couple of chairs, she kept the conversation on mistletoe.

At length he ventured: "It is—er—a nice Christmas custom, hanging up mistletoe, but I wonder why they always hang it over doors, windows or chandeliers?"

"Because it's not necessary to have any out on the stairs or in any other dark places," she murmured softly.

FREED FROM TURKISH YOKE

Chaldeans Promised a Measure of Independence Under the Guiding Hand of France.

The American army officer, chosen by the Chaldeans to present their appeal for independence to the council of allied premiers, reports that he has been unable to get a hearing for that ancient people. They made some attempt during the peace conference to obtain consideration, having heard that "self determination" was to be a guiding principle in the settlement of the world's affairs. Those at Versailles who had some familiarity with Biblical history may have recalled the Chaldeans, of course, but they failed to make an impression on minds surcharged with acute problems of twentieth-century statesmanship.

The Chaldeans, or Babylonians, however, may count on being better off than has been their lot for many centuries. They will get some benefit from the new era. Residing in northern Mesopotamia, which France now will control—the southern region being confided to Great Britain—they will be freed from their old oppressors, the Turks, and the French government has indicated a purpose to give them a measure of autonomy. The Chaldeans were once a warlike people, capable of demanding what they desired. More than 1,000,000 of them are now said to be dwelling in the region that will be redeemed from Turkey.

Comment "Sarkastic.

Now the vacuum subway express has been invented. Working somewhat after the fashion of the pneumatic cash carriers that have long been in use in department stores, the trains proceed from one tunnel station to another, according to prospectus, at the rate of 150 miles an hour. This speed is attained with slight expenditure of power, because the vacuum system removes all air resistance from the front of the train and applies expanding air to the rear. The inventor presumably got his idea for the vacuum subway while traveling by tube, and noting what a small quantity of air the cars could get along with.—Christian Science Monitor.

Repeated experiments and tests have proven to us the best way to build a Gothic. The roof must not be too high or too low. The necessary strength must be combined with light weight and economy of materials.

When you build a SHENLIN GOTHIC you are getting the full value of every dollar you spend and the satisfaction of knowing that a better barn has never been built.

Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Fard Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in priee at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached an the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

The event is looked forward to each year by the ladies as the occasion is always replete with new and varied diversions, and the party Saturday was no remiss in that respect. After the festivities, which were greatly enjoyed by all present, a delicious luncheon was served by Mrs. Johnson and daughter, Lilly. The guests present were: Mesdames N. E. Beebe, A. Martz, A. Kviness, A. Hed, D. Patterson, O. Gunstad, G. Fellman, and Jas. Kinney, and the Misses Ragna Loberg, Nellie Folstad, Alice Hall, Edith Dahl, and little Olive Ann Kviness.

Ecuador.

It was one hundred years ago that Ecuador liberated itself from Spanish rule. To commemorate the anniversary, Ecuador has issued a series with nineteen denominations—one centavo to one sucre—each bearing a portrait of some man who won renown in Ecuador's history. The dates 1820 and 1920 are a part of the design. Greatly to the surprise of collectors, no 20-centavo denomination appeared as part of the set, for Ecuador's sets for forty years have included one of that value. Inquiry brought the disclosure that 62,000 copies of a 20-centavo were printed, but the value description, veinte, meaning "twenty," was through an error spelled viente instead. The postal authorities destroyed the entire lot, and a 20-centavo will appear as soon as a new plate has been made.—Youth's Companion.

A Revealed Secret

By HELEN CLARKE

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

I really wonder if every girl feels as I do under similar circumstances. Certainly, I hope so, for I am too happy to draw a long breath. What is it that has made me so wildly joyous, oh little typewriter of mine? I will tap out the story on your keys, for you are indirectly responsible for it all.

First, do you need an introduction to me? If so, I am Clara Hart, stenographer and happiest girl in the world, just nineteen. Yesterday I could have said nineteen and never kissed, but today, well, typewriter, I'll tell you all about it. I've had several other places, but came here six months ago, and am the only girl in the business, the other employees being all men and boys, from the head down to Red the office boy. Of course my work was taking the letters of the Head, and occasionally ones from the rest, although they talk so slow that I can write them right off on you. The Head can rattle them off so fast that it keeps my pencil flying to keep up. It's hard to tell you just what the Head looks like, for you aren't a girl with eyes in your head; but he's great and big and such a man! His eyes look right into yours, and woe is me if you ever tell even a tiny fib; but I never have. There is something about such a man that inspires confidence, and, yes, love; I might as well write it and get it over. Some of the fellows in the outer office said that he was a woman hater, but I never believed that, for there are kind lines about his mouth, and when he smiles his whole face lights up, and you feel better and stronger for having known him.

Some one once told me that no girl ever married her employer unless she was fearfully in love or wanted a home very much indeed. Perhaps she is right, but I wonder why. Of course a man's stenographer does know him better than his home folks, in a way, but when he has only nice traits of character to show, why shouldn't she love him all the more? When a girl sees a man bear up under misfortune, keep his temper, show consideration under circumstances that would make a saint long to break all ten of the commandments, why, that tends to show how awfully nice he is, doesn't it? I think so. At last, yesterday morning, things came to a climax. The bookkeeper had piled things up on me the day before so that it was nine o'clock before I left the office, and I had not stopped for dinner. I left the work on the desk ready for him, but when I came down in the morning I found "Red" the office boy nearly frantic because he had spilled ink all over. This upset me, so (though I didn't say a word to "Red"; poor little chap, he couldn't help it) that my hands were shaking when I went in for dictation; and everything looked blurred before my eyes.

The Head began, speaking in his usual rapid way, but it really seemed to me that he, too, was nervous. Suddenly I found that he was beyond me, and I said, my voice trembling:

"Excuse me, but you are talking too fast."

He stared at me, and no wonder, for it was the first time I had ever asked him to speak slower.

"What's the matter?" he asked kindly, and I broke down. Just think of it, I cried like a baby, and all the time he was patting my shoulder with the ruler which he had snatched up in his excitement, not knowing what to do with a sobbing girl. I kept on crying harder and harder, and he kept on patting my shoulder with renewed force, until at last I couldn't stand it any longer, and so I gasped out:

"Please don't hit me any more, you're fairly pounding me," and then he looked at the ruler and realized what he was doing. He gave a gasp himself, and said kind of breathlessly:

"Why, bless my soul, what have I been doing?" and gazed at me, as I could see through my fingers, for my hands were over my face.

"I didn't mean to do this way," I began to apologize.

"And I never meant to pound you," he explained, still holding the ruler and looking from it to me and back again. The funny side of it struck me and I began to laugh through my tears, and then to cry again, and then it all happened so suddenly.

He bent nearer, asking in that kind, nice way of his: "My poor little girl, what is it? Who has been imposing on you? Bless me, I can't bear to see a woman cry.

"My dear Miss Hart, I am going to ask you a very strange thing."

"Yes," I said encouragingly.

"I am wondering if you would feel hurt if I asked for your resignation," he blurted out.

"Why?" I asked simply.

He turned towards me, and caught my eyes. I did not try to hide my secret any more. There was no need. The dear reached forward, caught my hands in his own, asking eagerly:

"Tell me, little girl, if it is possible that you can care for an old crusty fellow like me?" Dear typewriter, he is only thirty-five, and to call himself old!

"It not only is possible, it IS," I said, rather mixed up as to words, but certainly not as to meaning; and then I ceased to belong to the unkissed, and this is my last day here. The poor dear thought it his duty to send me away because he feared his love for me might disturb me. Do you wonder, typewriter of mine, that I am the happiest girl in all the world?

No Delay on Early Orders

THERE IS NOTHING QUITE SO IRRITATING AS TO HAVE WORK HELD UP FOR WANT OF MATERIAL; YET, IT IS SOMETHING THAT CANNOT ALWAYS BE AVOIDED.

THE man who places his order early is free from troubles of this sort. There is always a plentiful supply of materials early in the year, but at the peak of the building season a delay of a week at the factory or on the railroad may mean the moving of the carpenters from your job to another and they may not be back for a month.

The cement shortage last year was entirely unexpected and it caused no end of, delay and annoyance. We do not look for any trouble with cement shortage this year, but there may be something else as unexpected as the cement shortage of last year.

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Fard Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in priee at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached an the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

Sandalwood Long Prized.

Sandalwood is the product principally of the native state of Mysore, India, and the district of Coorg. Due to the development of the sandalwood oil extracting industry, the exportation of the wood from Madras has steadily declined, while that of the oil has increased. Sandalwood is the most famous of all scented woods. Its use for perfumery and incense dates back thousands of years. The later Greeks regarded it as one of their greatest luxuries, and no festivities were complete without it. Sandalwood figures prominently in religious ceremonies and burial rites in China and other oriental countries.

A MOVING STORY

By HELEN A. HOLDEN

(Copyright.)

From force of habit Stotesberry dropped in his ticket and started down the subway stairs. Half way he noticed the crowd on the platform below.

He would go until he was too weary to think. Then, perhaps, he could sleep.

It was maddening to have something on one's mind that would not be forgotten—something unpleasant to be gone over and over.

When he finally left the subway he found himself in an entirely strange part of the city. As far as he could see the street was deserted. This suited his mood. He pulled down his hat more securely on his head and started on his tramp.

"With due apology to 'The Broad White Way,' where am I?" he queried. "I surely came uptown in that subway."

When he came to a theater he scarcely hesitated. Its doors were invitingly open.

"Some jolly play," thought Stotesberry to himself, "will perhaps put me on my feet again."

The play had already begun. The head of the house had just entered the stage. Harassed and worried with the cares of business, he came in looking for sympathy from the assembled family.

Stotesberry did not wait for more. Seizing his hat and coat, he escaped.

"If it begins like that, what will it be when the climax is reached?" he groaned.

Wrath filled his soul as he again hurried along the street. He wanted so much to forget. Why did fate conspire to keep him reminded of his trouble?

A little further on a brilliant sign announced "Motion Pictures."

"That promises well." Still, after his former unhappy experience, Stotesberry hesitated. "Anyway, it would be something to know just what a moving-picture show is like. I'll chance it. If it comes to the worst, I can escape."

Stotesberry paid the required dime, entered but did not take off his coat. If his stay were to be as short as it had been at the theater, it would hardly be worth while.

"Orchestra of one!" He was sitting on a line with a young girl at the piano. "Does she keep up that pace all through the performance? Couldn't! Yet her hands look it. The veins are all standing out about a yard.

"What would possess a girl to do a thing like that?" He had forgotten the pictures in his interest in the girl. "Nice looking, too. But doesn't she look all in? Never in my life saw any one so fagged—her face, her hands, her whole attitude.

"Wonder what her tragedy is? It's a bad one, or she wouldn't be playing her thirty knots an hour, for, I wonder, how many hours a day, anyway?"

Even when she passed her left hand wearily across her forehead her right carried on the air without interruption. Once she swayed as though she would fall.

"Why doesn't someone stop her?" Stotesberry felt righteous indignation. "There's something worrying that girl almost insane. And she has to keep on playing those jig tunes probably half the night."

With its customary abruptness, the curtain announced a few minutes intermission.

The tired hands came to a stop. The exhausted girl leaned her head wearily on them as they rested on the piano.

The girl fell over in a dead faint. Stotesberry was the first to reach her.

In a few minutes it was all over. Stotesberry had insisted on taking the girl directly home. The manager stormily refused.

With a grateful glance at Stotesberry, the girl declared herself all right. She wouldn't for anything break up the show! She promised not to faint again.

He had started out to forget. In the light of another's troubles his own had been forgotten. Now, as he remembered them, a wave of shame came over him.

He had been busy trying to forget a paltry twenty-five thousand he had made in Wall Street that day. His disappointment had been overwhelming—he had counted on fifty thousand.

The girl insisted on walking. It was not far to her home, and she needed the air.

"I can't tell you how sorry I am," Stotesberry did not know just how to put it. "But I think if you know all the circumstances it would probably not be nearly so bad as you imagine."

"Oh, it could not be much worse," replied the girl wearily. "It's all over, and there's no use thinking about it."

"He's just mad clean through. And there are plenty of others waiting for the job.

"Me and Tom went out skating at six o'clock this morning. Tom had to go to work at seven, but the ice was so good I stayed out all morning."

"Tom is—?" suggested Statesberry.

"Yes," replied the girl, "as soon as he gets a raise we're going to get married.

"Being out in the air all morning made me so sleepy I could hardly keep my eyes open in that hot place. It got worse and worse, till I couldn't fight it any longer, so I just dropped off for a few minutes."

Nobody Wants Bungler.

There's no place in progress for the bungler. The business man gets rid of the bungler as soon as he can. No organization wants the bungler on its rolls. Furthermore there's little excuse for the presence of such a nuisance. Above all there is no excuse for you to muss things up. You will do that occasionally in spite of yourself, because you are falsely reported, misunderstood or over-zealous. But you don't have to make a regular thing of it. Correct the past by a more careful present and you will be wiser through the mistake. So toe in, my boy, and make good. You have the world before you and your friends are waiting to help you celebrate the victory.—Grit.

Making Joss Sticks.

The composition of the candles called joss sticks, which are used in all the religious ceremonies of Buddhism, has long remained a mystery the preparation of the sticks being intrusted to certain persons chosen from a limited class. Not long ago, however, there was learned the manner of making joss sticks in Indo-China. A stem of bamboo is rolled into a preparation containing 14 different odoriferous drugs, two of which are significant, as showing a knowledge of chemical and physical properties. These are aconite, which serves to protect the sticks against the attacks of rats and mice, and camphor, which causes them to burn steadily without being periodically extinguished.

KEITH'S AUNT

By MILDRED WHITE

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

I heard of Miss Abigail Persons when I went to live with Aunt Emeline's family. You see, I was left a poor relation alone in the world, and it was decided that while the question of my future career was under consideration, I should make myself useful in the home of my kinsfolk. And though Aunt Emeline kept a cook, I found many duties to occupy my time. My socially ambitious cousins, Geraldine and Inez, left me few idle hours, with their sewing and various errands.

It was understood that Geraldine must marry money, while Inez should go abroad to study art. So there was excitement in the house when it was known that Keith Persons was coming for a visit.

Keith was the nephew and heir of the rich and eccentric Miss Abigail, and Aunt Emeline and this same Abigail had been classmates at college. Through this old acquaintanceship, Aunt Emeline's daughter had been privileged to meet the good-looking and altogether desirable Keith. But the letter announcing his coming visit caused apprehension, for he was bringing his Aunt Abigail to spend two weeks with her old friend.

Never in my life have I met one so downright disagreeable as she appeared. It was impossible to be naturally pleasing before her brusque sarcasms. For Miss Abigail was aware that the eager attention bestowed upon herself was not bestowed because of affection, but in the hope only of gaining her favor where Keith was concerned.

The aggressive old lady exercised a great influence over her good natured nephew. It was remarkable how he respected her judgment. And when I mention Keith—well, I'd better not mention him too much for as I came to see him day by day in my aunt's home, listening to his kindly voice and seeing the kindly twinkles in his deep gray eyes, why it happened that I grew to think of nothing else but Keith, though you may be sure that I tried to banish the foolishness. But it would not be banished because it was love—love, the unexpected, the unreasonable. Was it not the most unreasonable thing in the world for a poor relation to set her humble little cap for a king? For surely Keith Persons was a king, with his traveled and confident ways and his assured fortune in the future. Besides, he was Geraldine's king.

Aunt Emeline had decided that. So everyone was wonderfully agreeable to Miss Abigail during her visit, and her sarcasms and unpleasant chuckles fell on deaf ears. I, alone, so forgot myself as to speak back to the old creature. As I hurried to and fro with the daintiest china for her service, she flung out to me a remark to the effect that it was quite useless for me to also gain her favor as Keith would doubtless find a wife of his own seeking. Then and there I told Miss Abigail Persons how I'd scorn money which had brought to her only suspicion of her fellow creatures.

And I kept out of Keith's way more than ever after that. Then, abruptly one day, Miss Persons went away; her nephew escorted her to her home city.

I longed to see again the humorous light that came occasionally to Abigail Persons' eyes. And when Aunt Emeline told me that they had received a letter telling of an operation which had been performed on the old lady's eyes, and how it was feared that she would lose her sight, I broke down and cried. It seemed so pitiful that she might never realize sunshine anywhere. Then came the disturbing telegram.

Keith was bringing his aunt back to be nursed in the home of her friend. When she arrived at evening, Keith half carrying her from the taxi, Miss Abigail's formerly sharp bright eyes were hidden by large brown glasses. Her sight would no doubt come back later, she told us snappishly. As Miss Abigail could not see, it was considered unnecessary to put her in the dainty guest room, so she had my small room at the end of the hall. Silken coverlets also seemed superfluous where eyes could not see colors, so Geraldine brought out the old ones. When the family was out, I would carry up the flowered china that the old lady had loved, and when she spilled things on the forbidden tray cloth, I would wash it quickly and have it ironed before Geraldine knew. Embroidered linens, Geraldine said, were not essential. And when I looked at Keith's picture in its frame on Miss Abigail's dresser, I knew that I had loved the twinkles in her eyes because they were like Keith's and I kissed his picture before I realized what I was doing. For just one moment I was glad of Miss Abigail's blindness. Then her voice aroused me, and I turned to find her folding her dark glasses away. "So," she said gently, "you do truly love my boy after all. I had to be sure. And your heart is right, too—a very important fact little girl. I have seen much during these days of pretended blindness."

"You mean——?" I asked bewilderedly.

"That it was feared I might not be able to see after the operation," Miss Abigail replied, "but that I have been able to do so perfectly. So perfectly," she continued, "that I quite approve the [illegible] of Keith's heart, and it [illegible]

This is a Homebuilding Year

THOUSANDS of new homes are needed and will be built this year. Lumber prices have been reduced until they have almost reached pre-war levels, labor is plentiful and willing to give a good day's work for fair wages.

There is nothing to be gained by waiting longer to build. To put off building your home this year means depriving your family of home comforts without accomplishing any saving.

Get your plans made, buy your material, engage your carpenters and be ready to build when spring comes.

Cement and other building material may be hard to get later on. They were last year.

Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Fard Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in price at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached an the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordion order.

Of the Ancient Writers.

The excellence of the ancient writers does not consist in a trick that can be learned, but in a perfect adaptation of means to ends. The secret of the style of the great Greek and Roman authors is that it is the perfection of good sense. In the first place, said John Stuart Mill, they never use a word without a meaning or a word which adds nothing to the meaning; they knew what they wanted to say and their whole purpose was to say it with the highest degree of exactness and completeness and bring it home to the mind with the greatest possible clearness and vividness. The ancients were concise because of the extreme pains they took with their epithets; almost all moderns are prolix because they do not. The great ancients could express a thought so perfectly in a few words or sentences that they did not need to add any more.

Connects With Prizes

Westphall, who resides west of town, received notification this week that he was winner of first prize on Minnesota No. 13 corn for the northern section of the state, and also winner of first state prize on Russett potatoes at the Minnesota Crop Improvement Ass'n. farm products show held at St. Paul, Feb. 23-25. The exhibits were chosen from the best shown at the Red River Valley Farm Crops Show held at Crookston earlier in the winter. There were many contestants in both classes so Mr. Westphal's produce must have been well nigh perfect to obtain first score.

Have to Be Handy With Ax.

Nearly all rural Tasmanian men are fairly dexterous with the ax. In the back blocks it is a necessity of life, one of the settler's first jobs being to construct a hut or house out of the growing timber surrounding the site. On farms fencing posts are sure to be required, and splitting them out of tree trunks still demands skill as well as energy, though the older post and rail fence, the all-wood rabbit-proof fence, and the "chopping block" log fence still in vogue in heavily timbered districts required much more nice ax work than the post and wire fence now generally erected.

Genius Never Satisfied.

To get the product of genius you are never done. Work done must be constantly subjected to revision. Every time it is done over there is opportunity for eliminations or additions. Sometimes you will have to recast the whole thing as your study leads you deeper into truth. But what of that? The work you put on it will be forgotten in the joy of a more perfect production. Every revision shows where improvement is possible and the very working over makes the final result the more perfect. Young men have seldom patience enough to stick to a thing until it's put into its best possible shape. But the man of genius is never satisfied. To him work is never finished so long as improvement is possible. To him the ideal is the end to work for. Anything less than this is little better than an irritation.

High School Play

On the afternoon and evening of Tuesday, March 29th, the students of the St. Hilaire High School will present "ALL ON ACCOUNT OF POLLY". The play is a comedy in three acts but it is not the usual comedy,—not the burlesque on farm life nor the slapstick variety in which Charlie Chaplin stars. The first act opens with the members of a New York family as the chief characters of the play, and this family possesses almost all of the undesirable characteristics,—extravagance, vanity, selfishness, shallowness. Then into the midst of this family comes Polly Perkins, a simple little girl from a New England village. Through her influence the atmosphere of this household is immediately and miraculously changed. The cast includes representatives from all of the classes in high school. Some of them have appeared in dramatics before and more of them have not. But we know it will be well worth your while to see the old favorites and the "first nighters."

Entertain Friends

Misses Eleanor Anderson and Lois Forbes pleasantly entertained a dozen or more friends at the G. I. Fellman home last Saturday afternoon. A very enjoyable time was spent by the ladies after which a dainty lunch was served by the charming and capable hostesses.

In spite of the fact that the seagoing tonnage of the United States is today nearly 10,400,000 tons greater than in 1914, an advance of more than 500 per cent, and in spite of the intensive steamship production in Great Britain and the United States for themselves and other countries, the world's steel steam tonnage is now less by 3,500,000 tons gross than it would have been if the war had not interfered with the normal rate of expansion.

KILLS RATS

Better Than Traps For Rats

[illegible]

WHEN TIDES LIFT

By W. BERT FOSTER.

(Copyright.)

The tide waits upon no man. Therefore, the farmer-fishermen of Block Island watch its moods and fancies closely; for the sea, a fickle mistress, holds the island in an embrace which is today caressing, but may tomorrow be as the clutch of a ravening beast. In the spring and fall, when the heavy tides bring in their burden of rockweed and other deep sea vegetation, torn from its roots by the groundswell, the windrows cast up along the shores must needs be secured to feed the sterile farms.

"Shore rights" are jealously guarded then, for the weed, together with the shacklefish from the traps, constitutes the island's main supply of fertilizer. When the proprietors of these tidewater privileges have stacked such weed as they need for the year, their less fortunate neighbors are allowed to glean as they may among the rocks and along the stretches of beach. And it galled Abram Biddle mightily to be classed with the gleaners.

The Biddle place had fallen to him heavily mortgaged, however, and when he sold the "home lot" to Anson Sprague the shore rights went with it.

It is ill for one man to consider another "lucky" when he himself has been unfortunate; but Abram's feeling had been passive until the day he saw Anson walking about the old farm with Belle.

And so Abram, sore and heartsick, went his way, and no longer lingered at the church door for Belle on Sunday evenings, or drove a roundabout way to the harbor for the sake of passing her father's door.

His gloomy eyes noted the tide lifting among the rocks, heavy with its burden of brown and green weeds. He turned his team at the foot of the bluff, and then, with the fork in his hand, waded into the water and began to draw the green masses of weed ashore.

Suddenly the rattle of another wagon smote upon his ears. He glanced swiftly upward to see Anson's span of grays coming over the bluff.

"Hullo, Abe!" yelled Anson. "Got ahead of me, didn't ye?" Abram grunted and lifted a huge forkful of dripping weed into his cart.

Abram kept at his work feverishly. He feared to speak. He desired to get his load and depart.

"Them hosses of yourn don't draw much, do they?" shouted Anson. "Belle said to me she didn't think ye was doin' as well as common."

Abram dropped the reins and turned on him in a rage that smothered in his eyes and whitened his lips.

"So you and she discuss me atween ye, do ye? Ain't ye got nothin' better to do?"

"Oh, you'm mad this morning, Able."

There was a hot mist in Abram's eyes. Through it he saw the leering face of the man he hated, and at this he struck. Then Abram delivered a mighty blow and his antagonist went down.

Anson fell flat upon his back, his head coming in contact with a stone. A single gasp, and—he did not move again.

Abram, unsoftened by the sight, turned away. He picked up his reins and chirruped to the horses.

He rode on past the Allen house with his head on his breast, not noticing the girl who watched him from the window. He was throwing off the last weed in the barnyard when Uncle Bozzle puffed into view.

"Jes' what I been tellin' em!" wheezed the old man. "Another slice of it gone. Some o' you boys 'll have a wreck over there yit." Abram looked at him dully. "More of the bluff gone. Jes' seen it myself."

"The bluff caved again?" gasped Abram. "Where?"

Abram shrieked aloud, and, leaping from the cart, seized the first implement to his hand—a shovel—and started for the shore. Uncle Bozzle watched him breathlessly.

"Wal, th' dern fool!" he ejaculated at last.

Abram plunged down the side of the bluff, his heavy boots plowing deep furrows through the clay. Once upon the beach he began to dig madly into the heap.

"What in tarnation ye doin' there, Abe—burrerin' like a ground-haug?"

"Anson—he's under there!"

"Git aout! He ain't neither."

"He is, I tell you, Allen! See his team along yonder? He was drawin' weed this mornin'."

"Ya-as, I know. An' he left things at sixes an' sevens 'bout as us'al. He fell an' hit his head, he said, an' got me ter draw weed for him the rest o' the day. I seen him a-startin' off for the harbor half an hour ago. Jiminity, man! What's the matter o' ye?"

"He—he ain't dead?" whispered Abram.

"Not very. But you look some as though ye might be. Ye're atcherly white, man! Ye're weak's a gal. Say, that remin's me, Abe. Sister Belle wants ye ter stop at the house most partic'lar. Guess ye been too busy with yer spring work lately to do much courtin', hey?" said young Allen chuckled.

Abram climbed the bluff slowly, passing the broken place in the path with averted gaze. And as he drew nearer to the house Belle's sweet high toned [illegible] his ear once more. [illegible]

Candlemas Day.

The Romans had a day of purification, and in the course of time the second day of February was called the feast of the purification or presentation of Christ in the temple. At the Reformation the ceremonies of Candlemas day were not reduced all at once. Henry VIII proclaimed that "On Candlemas day it shall be declared that the bearing of candles is done in memory of Christ, the spiritual light, whom Simon did prophesy, as it is read in the church that day."

HERE'S ACTOR WITH A HEART

Actually Cut Out Chance of Delivering Soliloquy, to Accommodate His Leading Lady.

The exigency of a commuter desiring to catch the last train for a suburb compelled Othello to stifle Desdemona with extraordinary dispatch in the presentation of Shakespeare's tragedy at the National theater in Budapest the other night.

Emily Markus, the first tragic actress of the country, who was playing Desdemona, lives just outside of that city and has to catch the last train home.

So when Othello burst into Desdemona's bedchamber to declaim his passionate monologue before he stifled her, the audience was amazed to see that the Moor of Venice was apparently so furious that he could find no words to express his passion and Desdemona was smothered before the spectators had time to shudder.

Afterward it was learned that Miss Markus had whispered into the ear of the outraged Othello:

"Please strangle me quickly. If you are going to cackle your soliloquy I will lose my last train."

So the kind-hearted Moor complied with the last wish of the doomed woman.

TOOK CHANCES

Jimmy—Say, uncle, is a man a bigamist when he has one wife too many?

Uncle—Not necessarily. Now I have one wife too many and yet I'm no bigamist.

NO SNAP.

No manager of a Cook's tour has anything on the "Mrs. Cook" of the National Y. W. C. A.—the travel secretary in other words. She and her assistants not only meet all Y. W. C. A. secretaries returning from Europe and other countries but make all travel arrangements for workers going abroad. It sounds easy, but it means for every person, getting passports from Washington, making steamship reservations, getting vises (one from the consulate of each European country to be traveled through), obtaining sailing permits, seeing that the necessary clothing and equipment is taken along, taking people to the boat and bidding them "bon voyage" as the steamer starts off six hours behind schedule. During the war a large group of secretaries would sail on one boat and have to be passported, vised, affidavited and generally cared for. The number is much lower now, but the number of those returning to the United States has increased. Fifty-two boats have been met in the last few months. One thousand Christmas packages from relatives and friends of overseas workers have been received, listed, weighed, addressed and forwarded by this same department in the last month.

ALFALFA AS A REFRIGERATOR

Planted Around Farm Houses It Has Been Found to Reduce the Temperature Materially.

Refrigerators indoors are common enough, but it took the farmers in the Southwest to devise one for outdoor use.

A farmer who happened to plant a large field of alfalfa south of the farmhouse noticed during the hot summers that followed that his family did not suffer from the heat as did the neighbors. The thermometer showed a temperature five to ten degrees in his favor.

Someone suggested that it might be due to the alfalfa, tried the temperature just north of other alfalfa fields and found the same marked difference. Now the farmers of that region are planting alfalfa around their dwellings and enjoy summer temperatures that make a trip to the seashore needless, according to the Golden Age.

The cause of the coolness of winds passing over alfalfa fields is that the plant absorbs much moisture, the evaporation of which reduces the temperature of the air and lessens the summer heat in the adjoining land over which it blows.

The suggestion now is for farmers that wish to profit from the presence and the board money of summer vacationists to combine the profit and utility of alfalfa with higher rates from hot-weather boarders attracted by the coolness of the ten-acre refrigerator around the house.

Little by little men are beginning to learn how to utilize the means provided by a good Creator for their comfort and well-being.

Nightmares Have Meaning.

Dreams are made up of symbolic notions which are, however, easily deciphered, for symbols mean the same thing all over the world and have always meant the same thing. A nightmare is nothing but a dream so symbolical that we cannot understand its meaning and the image it conjures up frightens us. As soon as a sufferer from frequent nightmares, however, learns to interpret them and understand their meaning, he ceases to have them or to be frightened by them.

Few Have Seen Radium.

Radium is a metal that is described as having a white metallic luster. It has been isolated only once or twice, and few persons have seen it. It is ordinarily obtained from its ores in the form of sulphate, chloride or bromide, according to the United States geological survey, Department of the Interior, and it is in the form of these salts that it is usually sold and used. These are all white or nearly white substances, whose appearance is no more remarkable than that of common salt or baking powder. Tubes containing radium salts glow mostly because they include impurities which the radiations from the radium cause to give light. Radium minerals are very rarely, if ever, luminescent.

A Masterpiece

By WINFIELD SADLER

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

For years Herbert Bainfield had aimed to be an artist, but many things had stood in his way, principally the lack of money; but six months before an uncle had died, leaving him and his sister a modest sum, and Herbert had commenced to study art. He had taken lessons, then started off on a sketching trip through the South, for it was then winter. On his return he rented a studio, devoted himself to his art, painting steadily for a week. No one, not even his sister or The Girl had been admitted. Now he was giving a house warming, and behind an embroidered silk curtain was the result of his efforts.

"What's the subject of your picture?" asked the one who thought he might make good on houses. She knew that real estate had formerly been Herbert's business.

"I'm keeping it a secret," he returned gravely, and Mabel, his sister, chimed in:

"Yes, a really and truly secret. Why, not even Helen has wormed it out of him," and all the company present realized that if Helen Smith could not make him tell, no one could, for she was The Girl, a fact which everyone, including Helen herself, knew very well. As yet Herbert had not had the courage to tell her so, so he did not know whether he was The Man or not.

"Tell us. Put an end to the misery," suggested the young man who had asked if Herbert could paint, and the tea and sandwiches being all consumed, Herbert walked slowly across the floor to the silk curtain. Pausing an instant, the young man viewed the crowd. He saw Helen, of course, but was delighted to notice Hammond. He was art critic on the Courier, and Herbert knew he needed the good will of those who might not appreciate his artistic efforts. To tell the truth, though, Hammond was there because Mabel was. He would have sacrificed himself much more than this for her sake.

"Ladies and gentlemen, and honored critic," remembering Hammond just in time.

"I am glad to meet you there, I would say greet you here, I mean beat you where. Really, I mean you are welcome," and he polished off his face with a paint rag, hastily caught up, thereby decorating his face in a manner more startling than becoming.

"Yes, you are welcome, I'm welcome, Hammond is welcome, and we're all welcome," he managed to get out.

"Let's welcome each other," murmured Hammond, and then stopped, touched by Mabel's appealing eyes.

"Yes, of course we are all welcome," Herbert floundered, but Mabel helped him out by suggesting:

"Show us the picture."

"To be sure, the picture. I'll show it to you and you'll see then whether or not I'm an artist—if I'm not an orator," and Herbert beamed, flourishing the paint rag.

"I call my picture 'A Quiet Gossip,'" Herbert continued, suddenly drawing the curtain.

There was silence; then Helen gave a sob. It was awful.

Women can always be counted upon to rise to the occasion. The picture was terrible, but Herbert was not, at least to Helen. She knew, even if he had not yet found out that he was The Man for her, that he was, and disregarding the rest, she slipped up to him, and laying her hand on his arm, said bravely:

"I think it is a wonderful picture, Herbert. I'm awfully proud to know the artist who painted it."

"We all are," Hammond broke in, feeling the pathos of the situation, and especially Mabel's grief.

Herbert was not fooled, however. Dropping the curtain he said brokenly:

"I see how it is. I'm ahead of my time. People haven't learned yet to see things as they really are," and his party broke up hurriedly. However, one lingered, and when they were alone Herbert asked:

"Honestly, do you like this picture, Helen?"

For an instant she tried to say she did, but knowing its awfulness, she broke down, and between her sobs managed to say:

"No, I can't, but I do like you."

This helped "right smart," as Herbert had heard them say while he was South, and with Helen's soft young cheek pressed against his own, and her hand in his, he promised to try and forgive them all for not being truly artistic, and that very day, with Helen's kisses still warm on his lips, he signed a contract with a patent medicine house to go on the road. As he scrawled his name at the bottom, he said sadly:

"I had hoped to put my name to different things than this."

"Can you paint other pictures, keeping to these two characters?"

"To be sure; I have no other sketches."

"I'll give you a hundred for it and any others like it. It will make a dandy advertisement for our rheumatism tea."

Herbert accepted, for he wanted to be married at the same time that Mabel and Hammond were, but he has never given up his notion that he is producing masterpieces that some day the world will recognize. At any rate Helen is [illegible]

WHEN PRICES REACH THE VERY BOTTOM

WE all want to buy when the prices are lowest. This is human nature and good businesss. But how are you to tell when the bottom has been reached?

A general knowledge of conditions in the lumber business, the known shortage of buildings (the country is at least two years behind in its building program) and the fact that lumber prices are almost to pre-war levels has convinced us that there is nothing to be gained by waiting.

It is our belief that lumber prices have reached the bottom and we are placing orders for spring stock. We are buying all the material we expect to use during the coming building season.

The man who places his orders now will the benefit of Low Prices, Prompt Deliveries and Good Service.

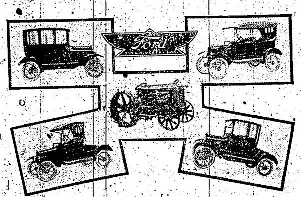
Miners Quick to Heed Portents.

Owls and rats in a mine mean even more than rats aboard ship. So long as the owls flit about silently and the rats fraternize, steal lunches and destroy gloves and other unguarded apparel, all is serene and nothing worse than voluble but harmless profanity results; but when the rats leave or an owl hoots just one tiny little hoot every man jack in that mine does a marathon for the top. If nothing ensues it confirms his belief that a cave-in would have infallibly occurred had they not got out just in the nick of time. Meanwhile the operating company can do nothing more sensible than smilingly accept the loss incident to a temporary shut-down as one of the unpreventable incidents of the mining game.

Wood Carving Came From Egypt.

Wood carving was common in very early Egyptian sculpture. Some of the most realistic statues of the ancient empire were carved in wood, such as the so-called "Sheikh-el-Beled" and his wife, and a number of others. Wood was a convenient ground for polychromatic decoration; that is, treating the carved figure with a thin coating of plaster upon which the artist placed his colors. This art was very popular with Egyptian artists. In Greece wood carving probably was the earliest form of archaic sculpture. The later Greeks and Romans used it comparatively little, but among the most remarkable works of early Christian sculpture are the carved wooden doors of Santa Sabina, Rome.



Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Ford Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in price at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached an the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

Strike in New Zealand.

It was in October, 1913, that New Zealand experienced a food and fuel shortage as a result of a general strike, which began with a walkout of shipwrights. New Zealand had been referred to frequently as "a land without strikes" by magazine writers, who found in its labor and social laws material for much praise. Its industrial laws often were held up as models. New Zealand is a British colonial possession, discovered by Tasman in 1642. The settlers have been often at war with the natives, the Maoris. The dominion does not have a socialist government, although it has adopted radically socialistic policies. The government is vested in a governor, appointed by the crown, and a general assembly consisting of a legislative council, appointed by the governor, and a house of representatives, elected.

Substitutes for Genius.

There can be no real substitute for genius, but there can be a great deal done to put you in the genius class. Men of genius are scarce. They are of special endowment and come in the right age to merit their full worth. Yet men really know many who enjoy the name of genius are nothing more than honest-to-goodness workers who use their heads and tirelessly plod on until they get what they set out for. On the other hand many meteor-like sons of glorious promise fade and speedily fall into disrepute when subjected to the routine of ordinary mortals. A few turns at life's commonplaces would soon have them making the ordinary attractive, and reducing drudgery to pleasure. But where this happens once there are thousands of occasions where it fails to produce.

Salaried or "Worth His Salt."

"Salary" is from the Latin, sal (salt), being derived from the early Roman custom of compensating her military officers with provisions as well as with coin. The analogy may still be discerned in the expression, "He is not worth his salt"—that is, his perquisites. "Supercilious" from supercilium, the eyebrow, is literally elevating the eyebrows with disdain. "Sierra," as in the Sierra mountains, aptly describes the serrated appearance of this range, the word being Spanish for "saw." A "cur," from the Latin curtus, is philologically a dog, with its tail cut short; hence, also the word "curtail" with its amplifications. And curiously we find "saunterer" sprung from La Sainte Terre (the Holy Land) whitherward pilgrims were wont leisurely to journey.

Now therefor notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by the same, to-wit: Lot Eleven (11) of Section Five (5), and Lots Five (5) and Six (6), the south half (S½) of the Northeast quarter (NE¼) and the Northwest quarter (NW¼) of the Southeast quarter (SE¼) of Section Eight (8) all in Township One Hundred Fifty-two (152) North of Range Thirty-nine (39) West of the 5th Principal Meridian, in Pennington County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditements and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the Court house in the City of Thief River Falls in said County and State, on the 2nd day of May, A. D. 1921, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., of that date, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $182.25 and interest, and the taxes if any on said premises, and Twenty-five dollars ($25.00) attorneys fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

LAID BIBLE SCENES IN CHINA

Native Artist Had No Conception of Any Other Land Outside of His Own.

In north Fukien province there dwelt an artist who painted pictures on silk for the gentry of his little village. The people in this secluded hamlet nestled amid the hills, had never seen automobiles or airplanes, nor did they take the long journey to Shanghai to watch the great steamers come in laden with merchandise and messages from the ports of the world. But they knew the words of Confucius and Lao-tse and they lived and died with simple dignity as their fathers had done before them. One evening the artist, who had been working all day on a memorial portrait, strolled out into the dark, cool street to refresh his tired soul, writes Elsie F. Weil in Asia Magazine. The tiny white church of the foreign god beyond the tea shop was brilliantly lighted. The artist stood a moment in the open door. The young missionary was talking most eloquently; he was not preaching, but he seemed to be telling stories that were as fascinating as those recited in the bazaars. Almost in spite of himself the artist sank unobtrusively into an empty seat. For the first time he heard some of the beautiful old stories of the Bible, which have held the people of the West enthralled for 2,000 years. And the artist returned to his home and made pictures of the story of Noah and the flood, and of the parables of the lost sheep and of the prodigal son and of many others that were in the book of the western missionary. But he had never heard of the Palestine. To him Noah was Chinese, and the lost sheep belonged to a farmer of his province and the prodigal son might well have been a dissolute youth of his own village.

NATION'S DEBT TO PILGRIMS

Their Famous Compact of Government Rightly Treasured as a Great State Document.

In the harbor at the tip of Cape Cod occurred the first birth and the first death among the Pilgrims in America. On board the Mayflower, as she lay at anchor, was born Peregrine, son of William and Susanna White. Here was another child for the ship's nursery, already occupied by little Oceanus Hopkins, who first saw the light of day far out at sea.

The death was that of Dorothy May, wife of William Bradford, future governor of Plymouth colony. She was drowned.

First of importance, however, of all that occurred here, and also in the sequence of events, was the drawing up and signing of the famous compact of government, originally designated by Bradford in his history as a combination. And so it was, in the most literal sense, a combination.

This agreement, made in writing by a little group of Englishmen who had been dismissed by their mother coun-

A most successful season of of basket ball is now over. Although the boys have tried very hard to schedule another game on the home floor, they have been unable to do so. The team has made a much better showing this year than last, having won seven games and lost but three. Should the same ones who have played on the team this year be back again next year, which is very possible, St. Hillaire High will prove to be a most formidable opponent.

The girls' team won one game and lost one, but had more games been scheuled, they undoubteoly would have won a large percent of them.

An Invitation

By BETTY K. KENDALL

(©, 19[illegible], Western Newspaper Union.)

"Don't say another word about the dance, I beg of you," said Alice. "I simply can't bear to hear any more about it."

"Since when are such subjects too frivolous for your ears?" queried Bessie, raising her eyebrows and looking up from her fancy work. "Especially when in all your finery and glory you most likely will lead the grand march with Frank."

"Nothing of the kind," answered Alice in a I-don't-care-what-happens tone.

"Didn't you have a new gown for the occasion?"

"Yes, and I'll wear it if only to show some people that I can't be stunned by their audacity."

"But if you're not going with Frank, who is?"

"Bella Johnson."

"Bessie, when a young man talks to you about a dance and asks your opinion on all details, and then at the eleventh hour asks another girl, do you think he can ever justify his conduct?" asked Alice.

"No, and I simply can't understand it," admitted Bessie.

"Are you sure?"

"Positively. Bella and I met Frank on the street. He came towards us in his usual cordial way, and stopped to say to Bella, 'I'm going to take you to the "Entre Nus" affair.' Bella must have had some inkling, as she didn't appear surprised, and only said: 'I thank you; what time will you call for me?'

"For a moment I felt the keen insult that he should invite her in my presence, and then I said: 'I'm going with Edwin Upton.' You know Edwin is always pestering me to go with him, so I knew I could rely upon his taking me. We left Frank at the corner, and though I was the one to be offended, he doesn't even bow to me when we pass each other by."

"Edwin is much shorter than you; don't you feel like a giantess when you're with him?"

"Well," said Alice, "it came to me like a flash that I wouldn't give either one of them the satisfaction that I couldn't go, and anyway a little man with loads of money is better than no man at all."

"That's philosophical enough, my dear, but don't get a bad case of glooms over it. If Frank is so fickle and changeable in his affections, it's better to know it now than later."

After Bessie left, the words, "it's better to know it now," kept ringing in Alice's ears. She hated to face the truth that any man could so lightly throw her friendship aside after all his professions of sincerity.

"I'll not have any one's sympathy," she determined. "At the dance I'll be the gayest of all."

"Why, Alice," exclaimed her friend a few days later, "how much better you look than the last time I saw you; you are fairly radiant. It must be your hat. It's so becoming."

A faint color rose in Alice's cheek. "Don't blame it all on my hat," she said; "give me credit for a portion of my good looks."

"I just saw Bella and she failed completely to appreciate Frank's charms," continued Bessie, "and she never was so bored in all her existence, that she was the only girl whose partner did not send her a corsage bouquet, and he never even was concerned whether her program was filled or not. In fact she said there was no pleasure to go with a young man who was constantly noticing another girl. Why do you think he asked her and then was so rude?"

Alice smiled.

"Promise you'll never tell."

"He was an unwilling victim. Toward the end of the evening Frank came up to me saying: 'Hope you enjoyed yourself.'

"'Oh, immensely,' I replied.

"'Doesn't your back ache from dancing with that midget?' he asked in a maddeningly sympathetic way.

"'Not a bit,' I answered. 'Edwin is a splendid dancer.'

"'Then you prefer that dwarf's attentions to mine!' he exclaimed in a jealous rage.

"'Just as much as you prefer Bella to me,' I replied.

"'But I don't, and never will,' he protested, looking at me tenderly. 'I asked you for tonight, not her.'

"'You asked me? How can you deliberately say that when I heard you invite her?'

"'Didn't I look at you, when I said I'm going to take you to the dance?'

"Then I laughed and laughed until I could not laugh any more.

"Until that moment I never thought about it. He's cross-eyed, and when he looked at Bella in his own heart and soul he was in reality staring at me. That's where all the trouble came up."

"Oh, how disconcerted Bella would be if she knew."

"She never will. The best part of our quarrel was the reconciliation."

"It's always been my pet aspiration to see you two married," said Bessie.

"Well, your wish will soon come true."

"Alice," asked Bessie, "would it be dreadful [illegible] if Frank [illegible] to you and [illegible]

Historical Ring.

The original diamond ring of Mary Queen of Scots, upon which are engraved the arms of England, Scotland and Ireland, quartered, and which was produced in evidence at the trial of the unfortunate Mary as a proof of her pretensions to the crown of England, was once in the possession of a certain Mr. Blachard, one of the lords of the admiralty. The history of this ring is curious. It descended from Mary to her grandson, Charles I, who gave it on the scaffold to Archbishop Juxon for his son, Charles II, who, in his troubles, pawned it in Holland for $1,500, where it was bought by Governor Yale and sold at his sale for $1,600, presumably for the Pretender. It afterward came into possesion of the duke of Argyll, and probably from him to the family of Mr. Blachard. At the last sale of his effects it was said to have been purchased for the prince regent.

Unlettered Presidents.

At least one of our Presidents, possibly two, never went to any kind of a school. The father of Andrew Johnson died when the lad was five years old, and his mother could not spare the money to educate him. This condition of poverty caused Andrew to be apprenticed to a tailor. He worked long hours and hard. One day a man brought a book to the shop and recited many selections that it contained. Andrew's ambition was stirred. With the man's help he learned the alphabet. But he made no real progress until his marriage. His wife read to him as he plied the needle. She helped him to learn to read and write. She was his school. Largely through her careful, patient instruction he was enabled to become the mayor of the town in which they lived.

Mussel Mud From Sea of Value.

Along the shores of Prince Edward island there is to be found extensive deposits of mussel mud, so called locally, being organic remains of countless generations of oysters, mussels, clams and other shell fish. The shells, usually more or less intact, are found embedded in dense deposits of a mud-like substance, and this combination is a fertilizer of high value and potency. It supplies lime and organic matter, besides small quantities of phosphates and alkalis. An ordinary dressing of it has a very marked beneficial effect on the poor and most exhausted soils. The shells decay slowly year by year, throwing off deposits around Prince Edward island varying from five feet to twenty-five feet in depth. They are taken up by dredging machines, worked from rafts in summer or from the ice in winter.

Mouse-Eating Toad.

The voracity of the toad in devouring earthworms, beetles, earwigs, and other creeping things, is well known, but it is an extremely rare occurrence for the animal to take a living mouse. Still, a circumstantial account is given of a toad at Portsmouth, England, that followed a mouse, not quite full grown, and suddenly drew it into its mouth. The mouse showed the dazed and fascinated signs that it exhibits in the presence of snakes and larger lizards. Dr. J. A. Boulenger has stated that he offered a tame toad very small mice, and they were eaten with avidity, and he believed that a toad will take any sort of live prey that it is able to swallow.

HONORED NAME IN MEDICINE

Henry Detwiler, Native of Switzerland, the First to Practice Homeopathy in America.

Among the first, if not the first, to successfully practice homeopathy in America was Henry Detwiler, who was born in Langenbruck, Switzerland, December 18, 1795.

He studied medicine a number of years before he came to this country on a vessel containing 400 French refugees who left their country after the defeat of Napoleon Bonaparte. He was appointed ship physician, and successfully treated an epidemic of dysentery which had broken out during the passage.

Coming to Pennsylvania, he settled in the Lehigh Valley, and gained prominence by treating a large number of people who were attacked with a mysterious disease which he finally diagnosed as bilious colic, resulting from eating apple butter.

He early made a study of the system of medicine founded by Hahnemann, and in 1828 dispensed the first remedy in Pennsylvania, in accordance with the law of similars, and during the remainder of his life was a devoted homeopathist.

Doctor Detwiler formed an intimate acquaintance with Hahnemann, who gave him a wonderful reception in Paris, where he met other noted physicians and scientists. He gave many natural history specimens to various colleges, founded an iron industry and finally died at the advanced age of ninety-two.—Chicago Journal.

'HILL 60' BOUGHT BY BREWER

Hotel May Be Erected on Ground in France That Will Hold Immortal Memories.

"Hill 60," whose record is written in British hearts with the blood of her young army, has been sold to a brewer.

"It is expected," says the London Times, "that a hotel will be erected there. From battleground of immortal memory to hostelry is a fate which may be deplored, but it is possible, even probable, that by an enterprise however foreign to sentiment, all that is associated with the place may be preserved.

"Hill 60," sacred with the memories of Loos and of many a subsequent resurgence of the tide of battle, consecrated as few other spots of earth have been by repeated baptisms of heroic blood, long ceased to be a hill. It was held, as one commanding officer reported, geographically, though its military value had been utterly destroyed.

"The 'hill' itself was blasted to dust long before the struggles for its possession had ended. Its name will endure as long as British history, and it is perhaps as well that a monument should mark the site of so many heroisms, even if the monument presents a commercial aspect."

Pueblo-Type Cottages Are Cement.

All the quaint charm of the old pueblo style of architecture is preserved in concrete in a series of little cottages now under construction in Monrovia, Cal. The one-story buildings are most remarkable for their complete use of cement, woodwork being practically eliminated. Even the roofs are concrete, and the doors are made of magnesite, according to an illustrated article in the January Popular Mechanics Magazine. The poured walls, five inches thick, inclose a web of waterproofing material, while the cement floors are stained in Spanish-leather effect, waxed and polished. The little structures are wholly fireproof, and easy cleaning is assured by the absence of moldings, casing and baseboards. Inclosed courts off the kitchen and sleeping chambers, partly roofed and partly screened, provide outdoor protection and privacy.

Making Pictures Popular.

A circulating library of pictures, instead of books, has been opened by the Y. W. C. A. of Brooklyn, N. Y. Good reproductions of the best pictures of today and earlier periods are kept on hand to be loaned out for two weeks or a month. Accompanying each picture is a brief account of the artist's life, the significance of the painting and data about the school and period of art to which the artist belongs. The idea behind the scheme is to familiarize the subscribers with some of the best examples of art, which they might not otherwise obtain and which they may eventually wish to own, after having lived with them a short time.

Threaten American Industry.

Spain is one of the greatest iron-ore centers of the world, shipping ore heavily to other European countries, as well as to the United States, and while it has some large iron and steel works, its output of the finished product has never been commensurate with its ore developments. Now, however, there is a well-defined project of the Krupps to set up a great branch at Bilboa, Spain, to manufacture agricultural machinery for the purpose of driving out of the market American companies who now have a large share of this business.

Betterment in Barns Means Gothic

ONLY ONE SHEVLIN GOTHIC

A genuine Shevlin Gothic costs no more than an imitation.

Why not have the best?

A GOOD product is sure to be imitated and the Shevlin Gothic barn is no exception. Other concerns will tell you they can sell you just as good a barn as the Shevlin, but when you ask them to show you pictures of the Gothic barns they have planned and sold, or to tell you the names of men who have built them, they are at a loss for an answer. They can't have one, as their experience in selling Gothic barns is too limited. They are experimenters and cannot be certain what the results will be.

There is but one genuine Shevlin Gothic and that is sold by Shevlin System yards. It is not an experiment, but the result of years of study to get the best barn pessible. We have shown you pictures of a great many of the Shevlin Gothics we have sold the last few years and can give you the names and addresses of many Red River Valley farmers who are satisfied owners of these barns. These men are, perhaps, your friends and neighbors and you know what they tell you is the truth.

Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Ford Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in price at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached on the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

Contract Case Tried

The court case between the local school district and Contractor Mc Adams of Thief River Falls, which has been continued thru two terms of court, was held at Thief River first of this week. It will be recalled that Mr. McAdams was awarded the contract for building the new school, but backed out after he had broken ground for the building. The board seeks to recover to the amount of the certified check deposited as an evidence of good faith by the contractor. Payment was refused on the check by the issuing bank at Thief River after Mr. Mc Adams flunked out on his contract. After hearing evidence, the matter was taken under consideration by Judge Grindeland and it is exbpected a decision will be handed down at an early date.

A Pleasing Play

The three act play "All on Account of Polly," presented by the local high school Tuesday, scored a great success. The play was given both afternoon and evening. At the latter performance the hall was filled to its limit. Space forbids making specail mention of the numerous fine points noted in the different characters, but let it suffice to say that every member of the cast played his or her part, as the case may be, to perfection. Nothing could have been improved upon, either in the cast or stage setting, and all who attended the performance are unanamous in pronouncing it an unqualified success. Pleasing and appropriate musical selections were rendered between the different acts. Much credit is due the members of the cast as well as the high school faculty who worked hard to make the play such a success.

Serbian Melodies Solemn.

The Serbian melodies are solemn and impressive, and have a strong affinity with their church music. The Hungarian songs, on the other hand, show vitality and impetuosity to an extraordinary degree. They are mostly in two-four time, but both the rhythms and the time change continually, and the music is full of pauses at effective moments and of modulations into unexpected keys, which correspond to constant changes in the sentiment of the songs, from deep sorrow to wild hilarity of satire. The "Hungarian Melodies," by Francis Korbay, contain very fine examples of such music, and the accompaniments of the songs in this collection are beautifully and thoroughly adapted to the melodies.

Charivari Party

There is a bunch of pretty blue young folks out in River township vicinity this week as a result of a charivari held Tuesday night. The young folks were bent on gving Mr. and Mrs. Henry Burstad a fitting send-off and scouts who have been on the trail of the newly weds for several days, thought they had them located at the Herman Burstad home Tuesday. On strength of that supposition, they proceeded over there in droves and put on a noise carnival calcuated to awaken the dead. Mr. Burstad invited them in to inspect his new house, showed them thru all the buildings and even invited them to climb trees in the neighborhood to convince them they were on a fruitless mission. In the meantime Mr. and Mrs. Henry Burstad were enjoying themselves in town, unaware of the efforts being expended by their friends to provide entertainment for them.

Japanese Kite Festival.

This is a religious festival. The Japs repair in their thousands to the tops of the highest mountains, where they erect light bamboo structures or huts, the roofs of which are protected with matting to keep out the wind and rain. There the parents go to sit and eat and talk, while their children play about and fly multicolored kites. Sometimes there are as many as thirty thousand kites of every conceivable shape, style, size and color flying from a mountain less than a square mile in area. The spectacle is extremely fascinating, and the kites appear like so many graceful birds or winged griffins, darting hither and thither among the clouds.

Peculiar Habit of Eels.

The history of the eel is very remarkable, and in some respects unique. During the spring and early summer thousands of young eels several inches long migrate up rivers from the sea and distribute themselves throughout every accessible body of water, whatever its size or character, frequently traveling overland to reach these. Here they remain concealed in the mud or beneath stones, and feed on all kinds of animal matter, living and dead. Many eels appear never to leave the fresh waters in which they have developed but most of them after several years, return to the sea, and enter comparatively deep water where sexual maturity and spawning takes place.

Ancient Grandeur in the Kitchen.

In the days when the Roman empire was at its height, if you went into the culinary department of an elegant establishment you would find saucepans lined with silver and pails of various descriptions richly inlaid with arabesques in silver, and shovels very handsomely and intricately carved. Egg frames, too, that would cook 20 eggs at once, and pastry molds shaped like shells, and an infinite assortment of gridirons, frying pans, cheese graters and tart dishes. The toilet tables of the Roman women were well supplied in the same lavish fashion. Ivory combs, perfumes, cosmetics, hairpins, even an elaborate hair net of gold, have been recently unearthed.

Four Stars Cut From One Jewel.

The Four Stars of Africa were cut from the huge Cullinan diamond, which weighed 1¼ pounds when discovered in Pretoria in 1904 and presented by the Union of South Africa. It looked like a lump of rock salt, and experts said it would have to be divided in the cutting. The largest portion was cut in a pear-shaped brilliant and set in the head of the king's scepter. The next largest portion was cut in cushion shape and set in the band of the king's state crown. The other two portions are in the band and cross of the queen's state crown. The largest portion weighs 516½ carats, and the four together 986 carats.

Sausages.

Surprising as it may seem, there are 1,700 different varieties of sausages in the world today. All nationalities love certain national dishes, and some form of sausage seems included in the cuisine of every country. China makes sausages, and very good ones, from the eastern point of view. Germany is pre-eminently a sausage-eating nation. Great quantities of this food are consumed by the people of Latin countries. In Italy and France they are eaten more as a relish than as a dish, and the noonday meal often commences with thin slices of cold sausage, flanked with a few olives and a pat of fresh butter. Sausages in France are associated with certain fete days, and a kind of blood sausage is always served at the Christmas eve supper. Neither is sausage a modern food, born of economy and the utilizing of meat scraps. The town of Koenigsburg, Germany, in 1558, celebrated the national dish by making a bologna sausage more than 600 feet long.

Eyebrows Tell a Story.

An Indian doctor has been making a study of the eyebrow, and he has found that in dementia praecox there are nearly always short, bushy hairs nearly meeting in the space between the eyebrows and a noticeable thinning toward the external side. In epileptic women the eyebrow is made up of two portions; the inside is in the form of a comma, of which the tail enters in the two branches of the external portion in the form of a Y. In epileptic men one often sees large tufted, heavily haired eyebrows, united at the median line. In maniac depressive cases the absence of the outer third of the eyebrow is common.

The Twilight Gate.

The Yomei gate at Nikko is magnificent. The ceiling of its entrance has a dragon gazing in eight directions, and the ceiling of the interior has a dragon gazing in four directions. The 12 pillars of the gate are of keyaki wood elaborately carved and inlaid with all kinds of precious woods. The beams are 20-cornered and each square is painted in minute designs. There are on this gate innumerable carvings of dragons and lions, all painted and lacquered profusely. One becomes so fascinated in studying the details that he tarries at the gate until the day wanes. Thus it has come to be called the Twilight gate.—Florence Peltier in Asia Magazine.

Red Lake Falls [illegible]

[illegible] through the grimy windows, that was more than [illegible] high.

The sun beat down on the country, and from the gray streets earth reflected heat waves, leaped back, quivering and distorting the view. Owen, though clad as lightly as possible, was literally sweltering.

He thought regretfully of the cool quiet of the club lounge which he had left twenty hours before; the shaded veranda, the icy shower baths, the invigorating chill of the swimming pool.

And he had let the chief talk him into making this trip on the off chance of getting the contract for putting up a bridge over some forsaken river or other in the wilds of the state, off the main line!

He groaned as he thought that he would probably be marooned up there for the better part of a week, interviewing county commissioners and highway experts in little boxlike offices that smell of dust and were abominably hot.

He mopped his brow again, more from force of habit than with any expectation of mitigating his discomfort, and glanced out of the window at the station which the train was at that moment languidly leaving. "Phillipsville," said the gilt letters. Only two more stops to Spring Valley—that, at least, was a comfort.

"I'm Going Away Tomorrow."

He would see the head of the state highway department that afternoon and try to be comfortable during the night, at least. He wondered what Spring Valley was like. For the twentieth time that day he drew the letter from the highway department from his pocket and read it from the courteous opening to the "Yours truly, J. Harbison, Comr."

It was a nice letter and "J. Harbison" had a nice signature—that, at least was something. Harbison wasn't a smoky old fogy—he was sure of that. * * * "Spring Valley!" roared the conductor, and Owen leaped to his feet and hurried from the train, clutching his rolls of blueprints and his suitcase.

Spring Valley was not prepossessing to the eye. At the station were three dilapidated looking vehicles drawn by somnolent horses and manned by dusky Jehus who bawled [illegible] the merits of the hotels they represented.

Owen took the least objectionable of these and was transported in due time to the Mansion House. [illegible]

[illegible] looking house with a cool-looking veranda and a lot of cool-looking chairs, and Miss Harbison was there to meet him. [illegible] two of them sat up and discussed estimates and time clauses and bonuses and penalties and such things [illegible] Owen went back to the hotel [illegible] at peace with the world. He was sure that he would be able to put the contract through in fine style and [illegible] Spring Valley didn't seem such a bad place after all.

For the rest of the week he was very busy putting the final details into shape, and he left for New York on Saturday with the contract in his pocket after a very pleasant evening spent in calling unofficially on J. Harbison, highway commissioner. His chief congratulated him.

"I suppose you're glad to be back from that hole in the ground," he said.

"Well—to tell you the truth, chief, I was hoping you'd let me go up there again. I'd like to see the work started, at least—and I know the ground, and—and—" he finished lamely.

The chief looked at him for a moment through half-shut eyes, then laughed. "All right, Bob," he chuckled. "You're the doctor. If you want to go back there and die of the heat, go ahead. No one else wants the job."

So it was that for the next three months Mr. Robert Owen, representative of the Perfection Bridge and Construction company, found himself stationed at Spring Valley, Spring county, Pennsylvania, spending as much of his time as possible in the company of Miss Joan Harbison, highway commissioner. And as the weeks slipped by and the construction got well under way, Mr. Owen found it more and more necessary to go to number 18 Cherry street for conferences.

That some of these conferences were not entirely official in character might have been shown by the fact that passersby heard, sometimes, the music of a guitar, very well played, coming from the veranda in the evenings. Mr. Owen had played on his college mandolin club, it appeared. But as the work progressed with great rapidity there could be no possible ground for carping on the part of village critics.

One evening in early September Miss Joan Harbison and Mr. Robert Owen went out to Bell River bridge in Miss Harbison's little runabout to take a look at their completed work. Tomorrow the bridge would be opened with appropriate ceremonies; the town council and the mayor would make speeches and there would be a band, and generally a good time would be had by all.

But in the twilight the bridge was peaceful and quiet as it gracefully spanned the stream; the two on the bank looked at it fondly and proudly. Miss Harbison with a sense of proprietorship, for the bridge would be a monument to her work as highway commissioner, Owen with an air of regarding a good piece of work. They were silent for a few moments, then Owen, stepping from the machine, invited his companion to sit beside him on a girder.

"Well, it's finished," he said after a pause.

"Yes," Miss Harbison sighed.

"What's the matter? Are you sorry it's over?"

"No—that is, yes. I mean I'm not sorry—and also—I am."

J. Harbison, the [illegible] efficient highway commissioner. The highly impersonal and very businesslike Robert Owen could find nothing to say but, "Are you?" which did not seem to have any direct bearing on the subject. More silence.

"I'm going away tomorrow," offered Robert, after a time.

"Are you? I'm sorry."

The words slipped out before Miss Harbison realized their import, and a [illegible]

MAKING STUDY OF BACTERIA

[illegible]

"The national collection of microbes at the Lister institute, London, Eng., which was started in January, now contains more than 800 different strains of bacteria," writes a medical correspondent. Let loose under appropriate conditions, they would cause more destruction of life than all the military and naval armaments of the world. "But you are safer here than digging in your garden," said Dr. St. John Brooks, who, with an assistant, Miss M. Rhodes, has the care of the collection. "We have bacteria here from almost every country in the world and receive new consignments every week. They are all micro-organisms which either cause disease or are useful in industry and agriculture. We have pure strains from which an endless succession of generations may be produced. To keep these microbes alive one must understand their various likes and dislikes. Some thrive on one kind of food on which others would languish and die. They are very sensitive to temperature. It is hoped in time to make this the most complete collection of death-dealing and industrially useful micro-organisms in the world."

ONE-PIECE SLIPPER.

Michael J. Hollenbach of Gloversville, N. Y., is the inventor of what is called a one-piece slipper. The material for it is cut out of a single piece of leather or cloth, so that all that is needed is to put in a few stitches and the footgear is complete.

This kind of slipper may be fitted over the foot like a surgical shoe. With correct cut, it fits smoothly and perfectly, having none of the looseness which gives most slippers a provoking inclination to drop off on slight provocation.

Another advantage it has is there is no seam at the heel to cause irritation and discomfort. And still another advantage is in lowering the cost of manufacture.

D. PATTERSON CALLED BY DEATH

Died Saturday Evening At St. Paul Hospital. Funeral This Afternoon.

Daniel Patterson, one of the best known and highly respected pioneer citizens of St. Hilaire, died at St. Lukes hospital in St. Paul late Sunday evening after a short illness.

His health commenced to fail last fall, and growing worse steadily, he and Mrs. Patterson went to St. Paul on March 21 to consult a specialist. His condition was found such that absolute rest was recommended, and he entered the hospital on Friday, March 25. Encouraging reports were received here and it seemed hopes of ultimate recovery were bright until Sunday, when he took a sudden turn and passed away. He had often expressed a wish that he might, when his time came, pass away quickly and without pain, and his wish in that respect was gratified. Mr. Patterson lacked only ten days of being 72 years old at the time of death. He was born at Inverness, Scotland, April 14, 1849. His parents died while he was a child and he made his home with one of his grandparents. When old enough to shift for himself, he became a baker's apprentice and followed that calling until he became a journeyman baker. In 1868 he emigrated to Canada, landing at Toronto, where the followed his trade for two years. Later he went to Chicago and from there to Wisconsin. In the last named state he engaged in railroad construction work for the Chicago Northwestern which was being constructed at that time. From Wisconsin he came west to Stillwater, where he became interested in logging. He drove on the Mississippi and St. Croix above Stillwater, working as far north as Brainard and Grand Rapids. Lured by stories of great things in logging farther west, he went over to Frazee where he followed both logging and road building. Later on he drove stage between Grand Forks and Fargo, touching at Fishers' Landing, Frog Point, Caledonia and other places familiar to all old settlers in that part of the country. Attracted by possibilities in this locality, which had been opened for settlement, he drifted this way, and took a homestead south of St. Hilaire in 1881.

The townsite becoming established that year, Mr. Patterson engaged in the livery and dray business in what is called the Addition. He was united in marriage to Anna L. Peterson of New London, Minn., on Nov. 14, 1888. Twelve years ago he retired from the livery business and since then has looked after the various interests accumulated during strenuous earlier years. He has served as vice president of the Merchants State Bank here and the First National Bank at Thief River Falls, being interested in both institutions. He held various village offices, being president for a number of terms. He was a member of the I. O. O. F., Masonic and Rebekah lodges. Of unimpeachable character and unquestioned integrity, he was a good citizen, a loyal and valued friend and neighbor. St. Hilaire suffers a distinct loss by the death of Mr. Patterson.

DANIEL PATTERSON

To mourn the loss of a devoted husband and father, he leaves his widow and eight children. The latter are: Mrs. O. Gunstad, Mabel, Inez, Ann, Mrs. C. F. Brantner, Olive, Margaret and Donald. Two sisters, Mrs. J. Shaw, of Paterson, N. J., and a twin sister, Mrs. Ann Ross of Denver, Colo., also survive. The remains arrived here Tuesday morning and funeral services will take place from the family home 2:00 o'clock this afternoon. Rev. J. B. Smith will officiate.

Olson--Fallman

On Easter Sunday at Detroit, Minn., occured the marriage of Miss Olga Olson (Swenson) to Mr. Herman Fallman, both of this village. The young folks kept the affair secret and none were aware of the happening until announcements were received and the bride and groom were back home. The farm home of Nels Lian in Star township was destroyed by fire Monday, March 28. Nothing was saved, and there was no insurance.—Goodridge Banner.

According to the Gonvick Banner, a big celebration in the nature of an Old Settlers picnic is being agitated to take place at Clearbrook on May 15, that date being the 25th anniversary of the opening of that district for settlement.

The Red Lake Falls Auto Club has sent in a protest against the Childs bill which would permit cties and villages to levy a wheelage tax on autos in addition to the state levy under the Good Roads law, says the Gazette.

Moore Family Leave

After spending a few weeks here since their auction sale held last month, Mr. and Mrs. John Moore and family left yesterday enroute for their old home at Goodhope, Ill. They left here by car and expect to make the entire distance by that method. Since coming to this part of the country about twelve years ago, the Moore family have been ideal citizens and good neighbors. An injury sustained by Mr. Moore a couple years ago practically necessitated his retirement from farming. He still retains his fine farm here, and stated before leaving that he expected to be back here to make his home in case conditions were not to his liking in Illinois.

The Moore family have alawys taken a prominent part in all social activities in the neighborhood, and their leaving is regretted by all who knew them. Best wishes of numerous friends here will be theirs wherever they may decide to locate.

Have Meeting

Regular monthly meeting of the St. Hilaire Community Club was held at the school house last Friday evening. A large number of people were present and a fine program rendered, which included a speech by A. J. Hed, a song by the Misses Tomina Hanson and Gertrude Blaska, a speech by Supt. Ziegler of Thief River Falls, and musical selections by Ruth and Oscar Gigstad. The Laides' Aid of the M. E. church sold lunch and members of the High School Senior class sold candy. A general talkfest was enjoyed by all and the younger people entertained themselves by playing games in the gymnasium. The club is growing rapidly in the number of its members and the enthusiasm with which the meetings have met, is evidence of the spirit of co-operation existing among the people.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Brantner arrived here yesterday from Aurora, Ill., to be present at the funeral of Mrs. Brantner's father, the late D. Patterson.

RECALL FATE OF FRANKLIN

Interesting Relics Recently Brought to Vancouver From the Land Where He Perished.

After being in the possession of the thrifty natives of King William's land for three-quarters of a century, a large number of interesting relics of the ill-fated Sir John Franklin polar expedition have been brought from the frozen north by Joe Benard, who is here after a four years' stay along the northernmost coast of the North American continent, says a Vancouver (B. C.) dispatch.

Though priceless from a collector's point of view, the utilitarian value of the relics is negligible, and they were obtained by Benard for a piece of lumber worth possibly 20 cents on the coast.

A few brass buttons among the relics are believed to have belonged to the distinguished leader, though there is as yet no positive proof of this.

Benard also obtained a number of primitive scientific instruments used by the northern tribes. These will be sold to various museums and universities for which the explorer has been collecting ethnological specimens and data since 1910. He also brought a collection of furs worth approximately $25,000.

Sir John Franklin, with 154 companions, sailed into the Arctic in 1845 to find the northwest passage, and was never heard of again. After many relief expeditions had failed, his fate was ascertained in 1859, when bleached skeletons were found on the trail to Hudson bay.

The Middle Initial.

With the exception of William H. Taft, Senator Harding is the first President since Rutherford B. Hayes, to use more than one Christian name. Grover Cleveland, William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson (who dropped his first name Thomas early in the career) got along without middle names or initials. The middle initial, incidentally, is almost exclusively an American characteristic. An Englishman may call himself John James Smith, but practically never John J. Smith. A Frenchman may be baptised Auguste Charles Jesus Marie Georges Dupont, but he will be known to the world as Georges Dupont and probably will sign himself G. Dupont.

The use of more than one given name is puzzling to a Frenchman. When Senator Lodge is mentioned in the French press, he is never "M. Lodge," but "M. Cabot Lodge," or as one prominent Paris daily writes it, "M. Cabot-Lodge." The President-Elect may look forward to be known on the continent as "President Gamaliel Harding."—Editorial Digest.

The Indelible Clue

(©, 1920, by the Wheeler Syndicate.)

"Landing the counterfeits is all well and good, but where does it get us if we don't know who made them?"

The speaker, William J. Burns, then connected with the United States secret service, glanced up from his examination of a large sofa which his associates had stopped just as it was on the point of being shipped from New York to Costa Rica—a sofa which was stuffed, not with wool or hair, but with $2,000,000 worth of counterfeit Costa Rican money destined to finance a Latin-American revolution.

So far as the men who had been working on the case had been able to discover, there was no way in which to trace the shipment. It had been brought to the dock in an ordinary dray which, having unloaded its burden, had driven off, to be lost among thousands of others of its kind in the streets of New York. Of the men who had shipped the sofa, the men responsible for counterfeiting the currency of a friendly nation, there was no indication whatever.

But Burns made a careful, almost microscopic, examination of the burlap with which the furniture had been wrapped. Down in one corner, half-obliterated, he discovered a peculiar mark—the numerals "2 XX 64"—which the detective rightly presumed referred in some way to the manufacturers of the fabric.

Inquiry through trade channels brought the information that burlap of that kind, bearing the "XX" mark, was sold by only one concern in the East. But even that discovery didn't bring Burns much closer to his quarry, for the books of the firm in question showed that more than 2,000 dealers had purchased "XX" burlap within the past year. One by one these dealers were eliminated, until only six remained. Among these was a furniture house in Long Island City and when that store opened for business on the following morning a square-jawed, stockily-built man of medium height entered and asked to see the manager.

"My name is Burns," he stated, flipping back the lapel of his coat in such a way as to afford a glimpse of his secret service badge. "I would like to have the opportunity of looking at the stock of burlap which you have on hand at the present time, in order to assist the government in running down a case of considerable importance."

But right there the man who solved many mysteries ran into a snag. None of the burlap bore the "2 XX 64" mark. The "XX" was there, but the numerals were all different.

"When did you get this stock in?" asked the detective.

"About a month ago," was the reply.

"Have you any of the former material on hand?"

The manager was inclined to think not, but a careful search of the warehouse brought to light a single piece of the former supply and there, in the corner, was the clue that Burns had hoped to find—the indelible "2 XX 64."

"Now," snapped the secret service man, "if you will let me see your books for the past three or four months, I won't bother you any longer."

That same afternoon Burns and two of his associates rang the bell of a house in Brooklyn occupied by a Mrs. Loni, who was, according to the clerk who had made the sale, "a Spanish woman who insisted upon buying a sofa of a certain kind, well padded and heavily stuffed." The sofa answered the description of the one which was being held at the wharf, and the very fact that the purchaser had been Spanish added the final connecting link. But, in order to avoid any possible slipup, Burns located the expressman who had taken the furniture from the Loni house to the dock—a feat which was far from difficult once he had a clue to the location of the home of the counterfeiters.

As he had expected, Mrs. Loni disclaimed any knowledge of the shipment and fell back upon a professed lack of understanding of English to bolster up her position. To her amazement, the detective replied in fluent Spanish, informing her that he had all the facts in the case—the statement of the clerk who had sold the sofa, the expressman who had carted it to the dock and the fact that he had seen with his own eyes $2,000,000 in counterfeit bills taken from the piece of furniture.

"This house is surrounded," concluded Burns. "I've got my hand on my gun and I'm going to stay right here until I land the men who made that money, if it takes me—" But it didn't take as long as he had expected, for as he spoke the woman's son-in-law, Ricardo de [illegible], stepped into the room and admitted that he and another Spaniard had been responsible for making and planting the counterfeits.

"The next time you try to pull off anything of the kind," Burns told him, [illegible] of the markings on the [illegible] likely to [illegible] penitentiary."

Tantalus.

According to Grecian mythology, Tantalus was a son of Zeus, or the Jupiter of the Romans. All traditions agree in stating that he was a wealthy king, but some call him king of Lydia, in Asia Minor, while others king of Corinth in Greece. He is celebrated in ancient traditions for the terrible punishment inflicted upon him after death. It was related that he divulged the secrets intrusted to him by Zeus, and was punished in the lower world by being inflicted with a raging thirst, and at the same time placed in the midst of a lake, the waters of which always receded from his as soon as he attempted to drink. From this tradition the English language has borrowed the verb to tantalize, that is, to hold out hopes or prospects that cannot be realized.

CHRISTMAS DAY IN AFRICA

Christmas day in Africa! And what a dream of beauty and color, blue sea, blue sky, groves of eucalyptus and olive trees, climbing roses, white-robed Arab women closely veiled, their eyes only showing; bare brown legs and feet, sometimes a silver bracelet on one leg, donkey boys with a nondescript, flowing garment, a red fez on their heads; color everywhere. Our villa is charming, stands in a little wood of eucalyptus trees, with a big garden, balconies, terraces and marble steps, large, high rooms and lovely views on all sides, Mme. Waddington writes from Algiers to Scribner's. It is quite in the country, five or six kilometers from Algiers, very high up in the hills. Very few people live in the town and the whole hillside is studded with villas, Moorish almost all, dazzling white, flat roofs and narrow windows. Quite at the top, where we are, there are some very comfortable Eastern modern houses. I am writing at my window, which gives on a terrace, from which there is a divine view of the sea and the snow mountains of the Djurjura, miles away in Kabylie, and from one corner through the faded drooping leaves of the eucalyptus I have a glimpse of the town of Algiers, lying a long, white streak far below.

The drawing-room is a delightful room—runs all the width of the house, with windows on three sides, so that we always have the sun. The furniture is sketchy, not much of it, and what there is is very ugly, but when the Paris cases arrive, with a few tables and chairs and silver, the room will look very different. There are some carpets in the house, which are absolutely necessary, as all the floors are tiled. However, Charlotte has done wonders with the meager material she has.

Enjoy your home while paying for it

Even though you saved as much money each month--and few men do--as you would be paying for a home, you would deprive yourself and family of the comforts and satisfaction of a home for the years you were saving money to build one. ¶How much more satisfaction you would get out of life, if you would build the home first and enjoy it while paying for it. ¶The years quickly slip by and the first thing you know, you have made the last payment on your home and it is YOURS--yours to enjoy for many years to come, with never a thought of landlords, moving or rent. ¶It is possible for every ambitious, reliable man to have a home and enjoy it while paying for it.

Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Ford Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in price at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached on the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the Book "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or [illegible] hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

NEW BUILDING FOR CREAMERY

Board Approves Plan For New Modern Plant To Be Built This Year.

The St. Hilaire Co-operative Creamery will be housed in its own modern plant before summer is over, according to present plans. Realizing the need for more room and better equipment, the board has accepted plans for a new building which will be located on the company's downtown location, the lots formerly used by the Hotel Markham. Plans call for a building size 44x66, all brick and concrete contruction. A full basement will be built which will house the boiler, and balance will be used for storage. The ground floor plan calls for office and rest room in front, large work room in the center, warehouse and refrigerating plant in the rear. All machinery will be electrically operated thereby doing away with all dirt and smoke incident to a steam plant. The whole plan is extremely well made, and the building will be one of the best and most conveniently arranged in this part of the state.

Solicitors are at work in tributary territory this week selling stock which is the method adopted for raising the necessary money to build with. Thirty minutes work in the village last Friday resulted in over $3,000.00 worth of stock being taken by citizens. Excellent results are reported from all teams in the field, and it is expected that over half the amount needed will be subscribed by the last of this week.

Historic Weather Vane.

The Dutch burghers who followed Henry Hudson from Netherlands to New Amsterdam brought their weathercocks and set them up on the steeples and towers that are seen in the quaint old pictures of old New York. One of these old vanes is probably the oldest thing in New York at the present time. It is the original gilded weathercock of the old Dutch Stadt Huys, or city hall, now in the possession of the St. Nicholas society. The hall, first used as a tavern, was erected in 1642 by Director Kieft. In 1699 it was sold by the city to a Mr. Rodman. The weather vane on the structure came into the possession of Mrs. Elizabeth Mackie. She gave it to Washington Irving, May 13, 1836, who kept it for some years on his house at Sleepy Hollow. He presented it to the St. Nicholas society December 9, 1848, and since that time it has graced the speakers' table at every banquet of the society.

Painful Accident

Henry Blaske is navigating on crutches as the result of an accident Tuesday while using a power wood saw. In some manner he slipped and one leg came in contact with the saw, cutting a deep gash in the fleshy part of the leg below the knee. Mr. Blaska had the wound attended to at once so no complications are looked for, but he will be inconvenienced for a few days until it heals.

Lose To Middle River

The city basketball team was defeated by a score of 17 to 15 when they met Middle River in a return game in that city last week. Two of our boys were temporarily crippled during the latter part of the game, which was evidently played rather hard by both sides.

Steel Prices Reduced

Announcement of a substantial reduction in steel was made this week by the United States Steel Corporation. The reduction was made in order to stimulate building activity which has been lagging since last fall.

Co-operative Shipping

Eleven creameries in Meeker county have banded together in an effort to standardize their butter output, improve their markets and save money by shipping the combined output in carload lots. The organization figures on saving at least $10,000.00 by adopting this plan.

Spring Work Starts

Spring work in this vicinity is well under way this week. Some dragging and seeding was done on high ground last week. The ground is reported to be in fine condition, and the acreage to be put in will be about the same as in previous years.

Mr. Anton Baker of Thief River Falls, is visiting here this week with his friend, M.R. Hage, Instinct of the Groundhog.

Questions about the groundhog as a weather prognosticator arise with each recurring February 2. The marmot family, to which the groundhog belongs, lies dormant in winter, hibernating much like the bear and the bat. At the approach of cold weather in the fall they curl up asleep at the bottom of their deep burrows. About the time of the usual midwinter thaw the groundhog comes out. By a peculiar instinct he is able to foretell the weather several weeks ahead. When his sagacity tells him that an early break-up is at hand he stays out. When a storm period threatens he pops into his hole again and goes to sleep, not reappearing for weeks.

Salaries or "Worth His Salt."

"Salary" is from the Latin, sal (salt), being derived from the early Roman custom of compensating her military officers with provisions as well as with coin. The analogy may still be discerned in the expression, "He is not worth his salt"—that is, his perquisites. "Supercilious" from supercilium, the eyebrow, is literally elevating the eyebrows with disdain. "Sierra," as in the Sierra mountains, aptly describes the serrated appearance of the range, the word being Spanish [illegible]

Molars Are Important

Startling revelations are made by dental clinics in regard to condition of mouth health of Minnesota school children. Over one half of the chieren have lost one or more of the six year molars either from neglect or because it was not known they were permanent. The six year molar is the first permanent teeth to be cut, and make their appearance when the child is about six years of age. Early loss of these teeth causes other teeth to come in out of position. They play an important part in the shape of the face, and very effort should be made to preserve them.

Little Son Dies

Donald, the two year old son of Mr. and Mrs. L. Giese of Euclid, died Sunday in a hospital at Grand Forks where he had been a patient for over five weeks suffering from pneumonia. Mrs. H. O. Hogmanay.

Hogmanay, Hogmena or Hagmena means holy month. December is so-called because our Lord was born on the 25th thereof. The word is derived from the Saxon "Halig manath," holy month. New Year's eve is called "Hogmonay night" or "Hogg-night," and it is still customary in parts of Scotland for persons to go from door to door on that night, asking in rude rhymes for cakes or money. King Haco of Norway fixed the feast of Yole on Christmas day, the eve of which used to be called hogg-night, but the Scots were taught by the French to transfer the feast of Yole to the feast of Noel and hogg-night has ever since been the last of December.

HUGE SUM PAID IN CREAM CHECKS

Over Million Dollars Paid To Patrons By St. Hilaire Creamery Ass'n.

Very few, if any people, in this community have any concrete idea of the amount of business done by the local creamery since it was started in June, 1902. When the creamey first begun operating it was looked upon as a speculative venture, and none seemed to have any idea it would last for any length of time. Only a little over three thousand dollars worth of business was done the first year. Since then it has grown gradually until it now pays out in the neighborhood of $125,000.00 a year. A careful compilation taken from statements published each year in the Spectator shows the St. Hilaire creamery has paid out the huge sum of $1,140,000.00 since it begun to operate and counting up to the last statement, December 31, 1920.

Over one and one-eighth millions of dollars paid out for butterfat is a big sum, but at the present rate of doing business, the creamery will again pay that amount in about eight years. With more settlers coming in, and dairymen constantly increasing their herds, it is not impossible to expect that the creamery will pay a million dollars in five years which would be less than double the business done at present.

"Look back over the city's death records for the past six months and then ask Dr. Albert Beaurigard why it is that fifteen prominent citizens have died from cholera and yellow fever when there has been no epidemic. Ask him why these men died within a few days after dining at his house."

This was the anonymous letter that led the chief of police of Buenos Aires to assign Manuel Porteras, one of his best men, to the case which was destined to become unique in criminal annals.

It was true that a number of men who were prominent in the life of the city—bankers and lawyers and doctors—had died within the period mentioned in the unsigned communication. But in every case the attending physicians had given certificates of death from natural causes. In fact, as Porteras pointed out to his chief, there had been autopsies on three of the bodies, but even these post-mortem examinations disclosed nothing out of the ordinary.

"I know all that," retorted the chief of police, "but the charges made in this letter are too grave to overlook—if only for the sake of Doctor Beaurigard's reputation. It is unthinkable that a scientist of his standing, a member of the Ecole de Medicine, a man who is mentioned as the logical successor to Koch, should be connected with these deaths. Besides, what would be his motive?"

"Professional jealousy?" hazarded Porteras.

"Possibly, but that's hardly probable."

Before tackling the question of the letter itself, Porteras dug back into the history of the fifteen men who had died of cholera and yellow fever. In no case did he find any reason which would explain their murder, any motive for removing them.

What Porteras did find, however, was a support for the allegation of the anonymous writer. Each of the dead men had been a guest at the Beaurigard home only a few days before their death. Less than twenty-four hours later they developed symptoms of the dread disease!

Armed with this information, the detective started his search for the man who had written the note. Disguised as a book agent, Porteras succeeded in securing samples of the handwriting of a number of persons who were known to be friendly with Doctor Beaurigard, but none of these showed the distinct characteristics which were apparent even in the altered penmanship of the letter to the police. It was not until he came away from the Beaurigard home with samples of the servants' handwriting that he found what he had been looking for.

The following morning Buenos Aires was startled by the news of the arrest of Dr. Albert Beaurigard, the foremost physician in South America, on a charge of murder.

During the days which preceded his trial the scientist preserved an air of total nonchalance, appearing oblivious of the fact that he was about to be tried for his life and contenting himself with the issuance of statements that the "whole matter was too absurd to be considered seriously." So numerous were his friends and so secure his position in the social life of the South American capital that the majority of the people claimed that the affair was a plot on the part of the police, an attempt to cover their past failures by a sensational prosecution of an innocent man.

It was not until the state had laid the foundation for its case by introducing the testimony of physicians who had attended the dead men, followed by proof that each of these men had dined at the Beaurigard home only a few hours before they had been taken ill, that Porteras played his trump card. At his direction the prosecuting attorney called Doctor Beaurigard's butler to the stand and for the first time the face of the accused showed the strain under which he had been laboring.

"All preparations for the dinners were left in my hands," testified the butler, "with the exception of the preparation of a single glass of creme de menthe. This Doctor Beaurigard invariably fixed himself, placing it on the tray in the midst of the other glasses."

"What was the difference between this glass and the others?"

"The liqueur was the same. The ice came from a small test tube in Doctor Beaurigard's laboratory!"

Hardly had the butler finished this sentence before the prisoner was on his feet, his left hand upraised to attract the attention of the Court.

"Yes," he exclaimed, "I am responsible for their deaths, but you'd never have discovered it if it hadn't been for this prying servant. I desired to make experiments with the cholera and yellow fever germs. Other subjects were impossible to secure, so I determined to gamble with death, for the fatal glass might have come to me as easily as to any of the others. The germs were frozen in the ice, but too late I will never live to see [illegible]

HEART CAN FEEL NO PAIN

But Vital Organ Sends Out Its Message of Warning When Physical Danger Threatens.

The heart has no nerves of sensation, Stanley M. Rinehart, M. D., writes in the Saturday Evening Post. If the surgeon could get to it without cutting through the sensory nerves on the surface of the body he could operate upon the heart itself without causing pain. And yet pain is sometimes a symptom of heart disease but it is produced in a roundabout way.

If the heart cannot feel, how can there be pain in heart disease? Branches of the heart nerves go to certain subcenters in the spinal cord and there they connect with the superficial nerves of sensation. Continued irritation of the heart nerves is thus communicated to the surface nerves and there is reflex or referred pain, not in the heart, but in the chest wall over which the sensory nerves are distributed.

True heart pain is always due to exhaustion of the heart muscle and may be recognized by the presence of other symptoms. It is made worse by the slightest exertion; by anything that increases the rapidity of the heart's contractions. And nearly always the respirations are labored and deep, expressing the desire of the sluggish blood stream for more air. But the pain is in the chest wall, never in the heart.

More significant than pain is a feeling of contraction, of tightness in the chest behind the breastbone, which may be experienced by those of middle age. It is especially noticeable after a full meal, after smoking or during exertion. This is another of nature's quiet warnings. It usually accompanies high blood pressure, with or without hardening of the arteries. The more often the sensation recurs and the more easily it is induced, the more attention it demands.

ENORMOUS DAMAGE BY SOOT

Figures Explain Reasons for the Rapid Decay of Buildings in the City of London.

The decay to the fabric of Westminster abbey, for the repair of which an eloquent appeal has recently received wide publicity, will serve to direct attention once again to one of the chief causes for the rapid destruction to which the building stones of many important London edifices are subject. Even in industrial areas at least 50 per cent of the smoke nuisance is attributable to domestic chimneys up which something like 2,500,000 tons of soot escapes annually in the United Kingdom, this figure representing about 6 per cent of the domestic consumption of 40,000,000 tons of bituminous coal. Of the average of at least 1 per cent of sulphur in such coal more than one-half escapes into the atmosphere as sulphuric or sulphurous acids, more or less localized on the tarry and adhesive soot particles, each of which constitutes a center of active corrosion, especially on such easily corrodable materials as calcereous.

Said About Women.

"Man is the dry land, and woman, she is the sea. For whosoever diggeth in the earth, he findeth out the substance of it. But he that diggeth in the water is for ever fighting its contrariness."—From "The Book of Artemas." "If you describe a right woman in a laudable sense, she should have gentle softness, tender fear, and all those parts of life which distinguish her from the other sex."—Sir Richard Steele. "Last among the characteristics of woman is that sweet motherly love, with which nature has gifted her; it is almost independent of cold reason and wholly removed from all hope of reward."—Harder.

Funeral, Thursday

Funeral services for the late D. Patterson, were held from the family home last Thursday afternoon, Rev. J. B. Smith of Thief River Falls preached the funeral sermon in which he paid a glowing tribute to the numerous good qualities of the deceased.

The service was in charge of the Masonic lodge of Thief River of which Mr. Patterson had long been a member. Members of the local I. O. O. F. and Rebekah lodges, attired in regalia, attended in a body. A profusion of beautiful flowers, tributes from friends far and near, covered the beir showing the esteem in which Mr. Patterson was held by all who knew him. At the cemetery the beautiful and impressive Masonic burial service was read as the flower-covered casket was lowered to its last resting place in the family burial plot.

At The Close of The Day

By Henry S. Goff

The following beautiful lines so fully sum up the life, character and work of Daniel Patterson, that it seems appropriate and fitting to publish them at this time.

You have sought in life for a righteous creed,
Your hands have united with creed their deed,
And your feet have been swift at the call of need—
Oh! how sweet it would be if endorsements like these Could be wafted to me in the evening breeze.

You have gone where your thoughts of duty led,
You have fought for the right where righteousness bled,
You have trod the paths it was yours to tread—
Oh! such comforting thoughts, could they come to me
As my life shall draw near to the life to be.

You have been to your deep convictions true,
You have helped a thousand fold more than you knew,
You have done the work it was yours to do—
Oh! how grand it would be at the set of the sun,
Could I know that the work that was mine was done.

Full welcome the travel and toil of it all,
If at close of day I can bear the call,
As the light grows dim and the shadows fall—
Rejoice and be glad, for you did not fail
In the work that was yours on the devious trail.

Caesar's Words.

Julius Caesar is credited with the saying, which means, "I came, I saw, I conquered," in connection with his victories in Pontus, a kingdom of Asia Minor, B. C. 47. The historian Suetonius states that the words were displayed before Caesar's title in his public triumph, to indicate the rapidity with which the campaign was concluded. Plutarch, in his life of Caesar, says the latter, in the account he gave one of his Roman friends of his victory over Pharnaces at Zela in Pontus, used the three words as a concise summary of the expedition.

LATHE TURNS MASTS FOR SHIPS.

What is virtually a combination lathe and planer of gigantic size taking work upward of 100 feet in length, is the interesting shipyard tool invented in Georgia, that is making new records in the manufacture of masts and spars, says Popular Mechanics Magazine in an illustrated story. The big stick of timber to be turned into a mast is centered between two tailstocks, one at each end, and supported at the center in an internal-gear chuck, which, driven by a 25-horsepower motor, revolves it at 18 r. p. m. The two cutting-head carriages, electrically propelled, travel on rails between the center and ends of the timber moving at the rate of three, six or twelve feet a minute.

THE SUNLIT WAY

By AGNES BROGAN.

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

Jasmine rode every morning, down the sunlit way. The park surrounding her big shabby home was gloomy in it's wealth of trees. The house was gloomy, too; so in her hour of recreation, Jasmine chose the sunlit way.

Jasmine, seated on her white horse, Bonnie, loved to dream, at the water's edge, of that other world so far away, and yet near, where other young people laughed and talked, and sang together.

Since her mother's death, when she had been too young to remember, the girl had known little companionship save that of Ursula, the housekeeper, and James Rhodes, her father. James Rhodes, aged prematurely by disappointment and sorrow, was a severe man.

The one friend who continued to bear with his humors was John Westwood of Westwood place, next door. And as James Rhodes, in his brokenhearted isolation—for he had never ceased to mourn his wife's loss—grew poorer, John Westwood, energetic and successful in business, grew ever richer.

Now, the one stubborn desire of the old thwarted man was to make that wealth his daughter's, through her marriage to his friend.

John Westwood admired Jasmine very much; he loved her, he said, and would make her happy. So Jasmine grievously disturbed, rode every morning down the sunlit way, trying to think out an escape from the impending fate. The girl in absorbing tenderness for her father, could not bear to deny his heart's one desire, and yet—

A stranger sat at the end of the sunlit road one day, a young and idle stranger, with arms clasped behind his head against the tree on which he leaned, and brown hair blown by the breeze from his high, white forehead. As the young man's frank blue eyes came back from their survey of the river, they rested upon Jasmine—seated there on her horse, in a kind of joyous wonder.

"You?" asked the young man, dreamily, "who are you?"

And also smilingly wondering, the girl replied: "I am Jasmine."

The stranger nodded.

"Of course," he said, "I might know that you would be Jasmine—when you came. A white flower."

Strangely acquiescent, she allowed him to take the bridle from her hand and lead her to a seat on the grass at his side.

"You come from the old house, Jasmine?" the young man asked.

"You see, I know that there are but two houses, and John Westwood lives in the other."

"Yes," she answered slowly, "from the old house."

"And you are?" he hesitated over his question.

Then Jasmine smiled.

"I am," she told her questioner, "occupied there as—companion."

She was away before the stranger could detain her, flying on Bonnie's back, up the sunlit road. In the somber silence of the park trees, the girl calmed, and her eyes grew wistful. Had it not all been a dream? Yet she went again, and still again, and every coming found him waiting. Then firmly Jasmine told herself that the meetings must end. It was the white horse who carried her there.

"I did not mean to come," she told the young man, decidedly. "Bonnie brought me."

"And your heart led Bonnie," he answered laughing softly, in confident assurance.

"But now that I have come," the girl went on, "I shall stay only to confess my deceit, and then—good-by. I, am Jasmine Rhodes, and I am to marry John Westwood."

"You!" gasped the young man, "to marry my crabbed old uncle? You, my little white flower!"

"Your uncle," she faltered confusedly.

The lover impatiently nodded.

"I came down to visit my uncle," he said. "He is putting me through college. Through all his crustiness, my uncle has an affection for me. But if you think that I shall let you marry him—"

Young John Westwood broke off abruptly.

"There is only one way to straighten it all," he said, "and we must hurry. My roadster will carry us quicker than Bonnie. It's on the river road. First, we will have to get a license. Then you shall come back here as my wife. Wealth can mean nothing to you as compared with love. Come, dear heart."

But Jasmine lingered.

"Some day," she said, "I will go with you. But first, I must be honest with both my father and his friend."

From behind the shelter of a tree came suddenly old John Westwood. "I would advise you, my dear," he said quietly, "to obey now the dictate of your heart. This lad is a good lad, and true love is more than money. I, myself, shall see your father, and after all, I am sure he will be well pleased with my nephew as son-in-law when he learns that I shall make him my heir."

"Oh," murmured Jasmine, "how can you be so [illegible] kind?"

Old John Westwood smiled [illegible]

Go Into Debt for a HOME it is Worth It

SHEVLIN SYSTEM

TO BORROW MONEY for improvements is building. To borrow money for extravagance is tearing down. The Government borrows money. Businessmen borrow money. The home-builder should borrow money.

There is nothing that does more to promote thrift; there is nothing that gives such real satisfaction, such lasting happiness; their is nothing that will make your wife happier or bring such smiles to the faces of the children, as a home of their very own.

Are these things not worth striving for? Are they not much more worth while than fleeting pleasures?

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached an the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. War Maps for Envelopes.

From the Red Cross Bulletin of the Baltic states, published at Riga:

"The shortage of paper has resulted in many novel makeshifts. One of these is the use of German and Russian official war maps as material for envelopes.

"Large quantities of war maps of the Russian, the German imperial army and Bermont's western volunteer army were captured by the Letts since their independence in November, 1918. They were sold to private interests, who make many varieties of envelopes from them. The paper is of excellent quality.

"No attempt was made to remove the map proper. The maps were simply folded and cut to size and glued. It is very convenient to open a letter and find that the inside of the envelope is a map of the district of which the letter treats."

Houses Few—Less Divorce.

France is finding one comfort in the housing shortage. Divorces are decreasing in Paris and other French cities "because of the lack of houses and apartments."

Unable to find suitable places in which to live apart, disgruntled couples in many places are composing their differences and continuing to live under the same roof. During the first three months of this year, 8,005 decrees were pronounced in Paris alone, but since April the shortage of houses has been making itself felt, with the result that the number of divorce actions has been falling steadily. Last month the number of applications fell below one thousand, and this month it is believed the number will not reach the seven hundred mark. It is an ill wind, etc.

Work.

If the busy rich people watched and rebuked the idle rich people, all would be right among them; and if the busy poor people watched and rebuked the idle poor people, all would be right among them. But each looks for the fault of the other. A hard working man of property is particularly offended by an idle beggar; and an orderly but poor workman is naturally intolerant of the licentious luxury of the rich. And what is severe judgment in the minds of the just men of either class becomes fierce enmity in the unjust—but among the unjust only. None but the dissolute among the poor look upon the rich as their natural enemies, or desire to pillage their houses and divide their property. None but the [illegible]

MOTOR EXPRESS IN OPERATION

Initial Trip Made Thru Here Yesterday. Prospects For Business Are Good.

The first trip of the motor express line between Grand Forks, Crookston, Red Lake Falls, St. Hilaire, Thief River, Warren, and other towns on the loop back to the Forks, was made yesterday. The first trip of the big truck was made on schedule time. One of the directors of the line spent some time here distributing rate and schedule books for information of those who wish to avail themselves of the service. The motor express will no doubt prove convenient to merchants and others who have occasion to ship to any of the towns on the loop. Parcels of all kinds as well as freight can be sent with perfcet safety by the express as the concern operates under practically the same conditions as a railroad in reargds to liability for goods they haul. The venture being entirey new in this section, will be watched with considerable interest.

Seeding is on in full blast in this vicinity. Some wheat went in as early as two weeks ago. The ground is reported to be in ideal condition.

H.A. Olsen, Mr. and Mrs. John Forseen autoed over to Warren yesterday where the latter is to receive treatment at the Warren hospital.

A meeting of the school board was held last Friday evening at which time a principal and three grade teachers were hired for the coming year.

"America," said the young man with a poetic light in his eye, "is the land where dreams come true."

"I wouldn't advise you to make a remark like that," said the hard-headed man of affairs, "to one of our prominent Bolsheviks on the eve of deportation. He might not agree with you."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Nightmares Have Meaning.

Dreams are made up of symbolic notions which are, however, easily deciphered, for symbols mean the same thing all over the world and have always meant the same thing. A nightmare is nothing but a dream so symbolical that we cannot understand its meaning and the image it conjures up frightens us. As soon as a sufferer from frequent nightmares, however, learns to interpret them and understand their meaning, he ceases to have them or to be frightened by them.

CHESS COMES EASY TO HIM

Youthful [illegible] Nothing Wonderful About His Mastership of Game.

Chess is the easiest game in the world to me. During the long dull days of the war my father used to play all the time with his friends. At first I did not understand what the chessmen were for, and wondered why father would sit for hours and gaze at the board with his funny-looking pieces. One day when I did not want to go out and play I watched him play his game. I became interested. I bothered my father so with questions that he chased me out of the game as soon as he was through with his friend. I waited eagerly for him to get through. He played a practice game with me, and I understood every move after that. The next game we played I beat my father, who is a very good chess player.

There is nothing wonderful about my way of playing the game. My secretary, Mr. [illegible], says that it comes from reincarnation. A baby is born with good brains and they explain it that way. They say that his ancestors or some spirits have given this power to him because so much ability in one person must have taken a long time to develop. When I play chess I can plan my moves six or seven moves ahead, and most players can only go three moves ahead of the game. I can't help it at all, I was born that way. I like to play with poor players. At West Point, where I beat 19 games and drew one, there were only nine good players; the others had no business trying to play me at all.

I have played lots of fine players in chess. During the war I beat the German governor at Warsaw, and he was an old man and a fine player. Then I drew a game with Rubenstein, the Russian champion, and also drew with Griffin in a blindfolded game in England. I have not played Lasker yet, but one of the 21 I beat in Paris says he drew a game with Lasker, and another said he beat Capablanca. In America, my hardest game so far has been with Colonel Fiebeger, sixty-two years old, at West Point.—Samuel Rzeszewski in Leslie's.

SEE SUICIDE NATIONAL PERIL

Influential Japanese Newspapers Exalt Christian Idea as to the Sacredness of Life.

Suicide, which has always been prevalent in Japan, is, according to the Japanese press, even more rife than ever since the financial crisis in the Land of the Rising Sun, says the Literary Digest in a recent issue. The Osaka Mainichi, which sees peril to the nation in the prevalence of self-slaughter, acknowledges the excellences of the Christian view that suicide, instead of being merely an apology for failure, is a crime. Many suicides in Japan are due to the fact that the Japanese have "less attachment to life than foreigners," and also to the traditions of feudal times when they belittled life.

The Osaka Mainichi says further: "Death—much more suicide—means evasion of responsibility . . . . and the notion that those who commit suicide have the keenest sense of responsibility is wrong. Suicide is the embodiment of egoism and irresponsibility. One of the strong points of the Christian people is their conviction that to kill one's self is as criminal as to kill others."

Remarkable Photographic Feat.

Conspicuous among a number of remarkable scenes in a three-reel motion-picture film recently taken of an Ohio steel mill in operation, is one that actually shows the boiling of molten metal in an open-hearth furnace heated to 3,000 degrees Fahrenheit. The photographic feat of successfully registering this action in detail on the film is particularly interesting, because the subject is one that a human eye can not gaze upon unprotected, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Furthermore, the extreme heat of the furnace cast some doubt on the safety of the camera, with its charge of celluloid ribbon, and while the exposure was made, two men stood ready to hurl the operator to a cooler place if anything happened.

Potato Flour Mixed With Wheat.

A fifty-fifty mixture of wheat flour from the United States and potato flour of domestic make has been ordered by the Netherlands government for its people with the hope of keeping down the price of bread. Unless something is done to keep down the price of imported wheat it will soon be out of the reach of the populace, says the Chicago Journal. Potato starch was used a great deal during the war for the purpose of piecing out the wheat flour supply, and it was not generally acceptable to the people, but potato flour will not be open to the same criticism, and it is anticipated will prove more palatable.

No Respecter of Persons.

"A squall!" cried Dorothy as the little launch headed for home.

Nan glanced over her shoulder at the yellow-brown clouds rapidly obscuring the sun. "We cannot reach the Point," she declared. "We must make for the nearest island."

"Is there any danger?" asked timid Dorothy, who had been insistent about remaining outside the breakwater.

"I think not," panted Nan, for her heart was throbbing fast. She was a little fearful of making the nearest island before the storm burst and Little Petrel island was a dangerous place to land. Many a small boat had gone down off the cruel rocks. When they were within a boat's length of the beach the wind broke loose with a scream of fury. A long wave rushed the boat upon the beach and left it there in the soft sand. The salt spray stung their lips and eyes.

Somehow they stumbled out of the boat and were thankful to feel solid ground under foot. Nancy tied the boat to a tree, for the tide was rushing in and they might lose it any moment.

"It is so exposed here on the windward side, let us walk around to the east beach; it will be warmer and drier there."

The wind snatched the words from her lips and tossed them away. The two girls screamed at each other and then laughed because not a word could be heard. At last they resorted to signs, and having found a substitute for speech, they started to walk around the shore, just above the high-water mark. Here were long stretches of dried seaweed, tangled with tiny shells, and Nan scooped up several armfuls and bade Dorothy do the same.

Both Girls Turned Pale.

"If we have to stay here all night it will make a good bed," she informed her companion.

It was then that Dorothy found the footprint in the sand and pointed it out to Nan. Both girls turned pale, for the footprint was freshly made—a generous shoe had made it—there was the print of a heel and a rubber sole.

It was pointed in the direction they were going.

"Shall we keep on?" pantomimed Dorothy.

Nan shook her head and motioned back. They retreated and went back to the boat, and finding the tide was still rising they entered the grove of trees. "It is quiet here," shrieked Dorothy, sinking down on the dry sand.

Nan followed suit and then, impatient of inaction, she jumped up again and explored the grove. In five minutes she was standing on the east beach and the footprint in the sand was explained.

Nan glared resentfully at the young man in white duck who was broiling bacon over a small fire in a scooped out sand hole. He looked at her in mild surprise.

"We have with us today," he began, but Nan only smiled scornfully and turned away. "Ninny!" she said impolitely, and one must admit that this was not quite the proper way for two strangers to open conversation.

"I was going to ask you why you intruded," he observed. "This is the island of Robinson Crusoe—and the island was nonsuffragist, you will remember!"

"Fancy!" drawled Nan, just because he hated the word. Ah, she knew this young man well! She had been engaged to marry him up to 2 o'clock this very afternoon. It was now 6 and the bacon smelt divinely. Dorothy had detected the odor of bacon and now came [illegible] into the scene. [illegible]

[illegible] bread, too! And coffee—it was too much.

"Good afternoon, Mr. Crusoe," she began.

"Name's Friday," protested the gentleman impaling strips of bacon on a neatly trimmed twig. "Starved?"

Dorothy nodded. "Please, Mr. Friday." Then, when he had made her a bacon sandwich, she took a huge bite and went over to the enemy, sitting down in the sand and conversing with him in the most friendly way imaginable.

"Shipwrecked?" he asked.

Dorothy told their story, calling upon Nan to verify the facts, but Nan sat at a distance her face turned stonily away, her heart sore and resentful. She was watching the waves as they pounded on the rocks below; she wondered if he would care if she was lying dead there among the seaweed.

She was feeling very sad—tomorrow they were leaving Coral Point and she might never see him again. He had a teasing way with him that irked her—now, only a few hours after the quarrel, she was missing him. What had they quarreled about? Such a trifle—she was shocked that she had almost forgotten the cause. He was coming now, with Dorothy, she could hear their voices in friendly argument.

"If I loved anyone—well enough to become engaged—well enough to plan to spend the rest of my life with him—or her," declared wise young Dorothy, "and remember it would have to be a great and glorious love (or I wouldn't love at all), then, it would have to be some huge difference that would separate us! If he wanted to wear red neckties, even—and I loathe them—I would say I love the man and I can learn to endure red neckties—because I loved him so much and he would feel the same way about trifles—and—I must see about the boat!" and Dorothy fled around the beach, leaving Nan and the Man Friday alone together.

She got up and stood uncertainly, tears were brimming her eyes, and she could hear his beloved footsteps coming nearer. She must be first to make amends. She was in the wrong.

"Mr. Friday," she called in a quavering voice. "I am sorry!"

What Mr. Friday said was intended for Nan's ear alone, but I am sure it had nothing to do with red neckties. Young Dorothy coming suddenly upon them, dashed back out of sight and when she had subdued her giggles, announced her coming by a brisk "Ship ahoy—hotel launch in the offing!" and scampered away.

Jim Treadwell smiled tenderly down at Nan. "The blessed angel," he muttered, unaware that the angel in question was eating up the bacon and cornbread.

MALAYS THE LAZIEST PEOPLE

Natives Characterized by a Marked Antipathy to Labor and Extremely Philosophical.

Their disregard of money makes all dealings with Malays extremely difficult, and their dislike for work has completely blocked more than one project, writes Charles Mayer in Asia Magazine. To my mind, the Malays are the laziest people in the world.

When work is an exciting or amusing game, such as the hunt, they will go on for days without signs of fatigue. They seem to keep alive by some fanatic energy. But when work is just plain labor they will say, "Wait" or "I must think." Or a Malay may say candidly: "Sir, I have had plenty to eat. I am content." Many times I have had a Malay tell me, when I asked him to do some work, that he had enough rice and fish for the day and that he might die during the night. It is an unanswerable argument. Tomorrow's food can be found when tomorrow comes.

Why should a Malay gentleman, who believes in Allah and whose stomach is full, do the labor that can be done by heathen, pig-eating Chinese?

"Will you row me across the river?" I asked a Malay one day.

"Tuan, I have eaten and I have plenty," he replied. "You may take my boat and row yourself across the river. Tomorrow, if Allah grants me life and if I need the boat, I will swim over for it."

That Malay trait of living for the moment has led many a European to murder, and more than once it made me feel like running amuck. It is maddening. Getting work out of Malays is a fine art, a science to be learned only after years of patient arguing and cajoling. And yet, with all their laziness, they are lovable people. In most cases they are brave and willing to do anything for a person they like.

Solar Energy in Plants.

The estimate is made that the amount of solar energy stored in plants each year is 22 times the amount of energy represented by the coal consumed in the same period. About 67 per cent of this plant energy is taken up by the forests, 24 per cent by cultivated plants, 7 per cent by grass of the steppes and prairies, and 2 per cent by the plants of desert lands. The energy received by forests alone is 14 times the energy of the coal used. But unfortunately the forests that receive this energy are mainly in the [illegible]

The growth of the telephone since its invention only 40 years ago has been amazing. Today there are approximately 12,500,000 telephones in use in the United States and the messages carried total over 22,000,000,000 per year, or approximately 211 for each man, woman and child in the nation. There are nearly 30,000,000 miles of wire and this equipment cost the staggering total of $2,000,000,000, about 700,000 individuals being owners of the securities.—Scientific American.

A STILLER GUEST

By FLORENCE MELLISH.

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It was a rainbow wedding—a pink maid-of-honor and blue and canary and lavender and pale green bridesmaids. Evelyn looked so sweet and childlike in her white gown and veil that I just curled into my corner of the pew and cried. I had loved her from her babyhood. I had made her first short frocks and rompers and her graduation gown, but my fingers had grown too stiff to be trusted with wedding garments.

Maurice Penfield, looking more dignified and self-possessed than ever, was none the less handsome for his graying temples.

"Isn't he fine looking?" Luella Bates whispered, "and so talented, and rich, too! But aren't you sorry he's a widower—a warmed-over man?"

"No," I whispered back, "he has been tested, and he has borne the test. He was all devotion to his invalid wife."

Luella was silenced, but down in my heart I was a little sorry. I wanted our Evelyn's marriage to be ideal in every way.

But, after all, it was not the lovely bride or the stately bridegroom who held the eyes of the little company that filled the pews. It was the lady who sat stiffly upright in the fourth pew of the west wing. They were whispering to each other:

"Who is the lady in gray?"

Doctor Landphear began the service in his quiet, penetrating tones. When he came to the words: "If any one knows any reason why these two should not be joined in marriage, let him speak now, or forever hold his peace," and I held my breath for an instant as I always did. I always had a nervous feeling: "What if some one should come forward and speak?" I had been a guest at 24 weddings, and no one had come forward.

This time some one did. It was the lady in gray.

"I know a reason," she said in a deep voice that could be heard in every corner of the church.

Doctor Landphear looked surprised, but he kept his usual dignified poise.

"Will you state your reason?" he asked quietly.

"My sister Muriel is Maurice Penfield's wife, and my sister Muriel is here."

The pink maid of honor flushed with anger. The lavender bridesmaid was in tears. The canary bridesmaid lifted her chin haughtily. The blue and pale green bridesmaids clung together tremblingly. Evelyn herself was deathly pale. Maurice Penfield threw a strong arm about her."

"It is my sister-in-law. The poor woman is insane." He turned to one of the ushers. "Can you take her out quietly?"

Evelyn turned instantly and looked behind her. I could see how violently she was trembling. Maurice drew her gently back.

"Try to be calm, Evelyn. The poor mad woman is not worth minding."

"But Muriel is there. I saw her myself," she shivered.

"Evelyn," he said, sternly, this time, "you must be calm." Then speaking to Doctor Landphear: "I think we may go on now."

Months after the dear girl came to me in that same little shabby room and told me the whole story.

"I am happy now, Miss Buffum," she said. "But I was very unhappy at first. Maurice was very patient and tender with me, but I could not make him understand. He would not believe that Muriel did come. He thought it was simply a case of nerves."

"But, Evelyn, I saw no one."

"But she was there. She came again. She came three times. I used to feel so guilty and frightened. You see, it was the locket."

"The locket, Evelyn?"

"Yes, the dearest, loveliest, quaintest silver locket you ever saw. It contained a lock of Muriel's hair. He had given it to Muriel, and she always wore it night and day underneath her gowns. Before she died she gave it back to Maurice and charged him never to let anyone else wear it. He showed it to me once, and I was childishly jealous. I wanted to wear it, and I worried Maurice until he gave it to me. I had it on under my wedding gown in church when Muriel came."

"But, Evelyn—"

"She did come. She came again three times and stood beside my bed. It was in the early morning when it was just beginning to be light. Maurice was always asleep and he would not believe it. But I saw her plain—her eyes were so sad and reproachful. The third time she stood with her eyes fixed on the chain that held the locket. It came to me what she wanted and I unclasped it and gave it to her. She smiled then and she didn't go out by the door. She just seemed to fade away and was gone. She never came again. I have lost my foolish jealousy of poor, sweet, gentle Muriel, and I am happy now."

"Did you tell Maurice about it?"

"Yes. I knew he felt some compunction over giving me the locket, and I wanted him to know that Muriel had it back. But he never could believe me. He said I must have dropped it into the fur rug and one of the chambermaids had found it."

"But, Evelyn, are you quite sure you didn't drop it into the fur rug?"

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Ford Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in price at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached an the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

Open Chicken Season

Minnesota sportsmen will have an opportunity to hunt prairie chickens again the coming fall, an act to that effect having passed during the last session of the legislature. A former act provided a closed season until next year, but chickens multiplied so rapidly that it was deemed unnecessary to protect them that long. Hunting with dogs will be permissable same as in the past. The season limit has been cut some but it is still enough to allow a couple days good hunting. An attempt to close the partridge season in alternate years was defeated.

Law Supplements Soon

Supplements containing laws passed by the 1920 session of the Minnesota legislature will soon be ready for distribution. These will be distributed by newspapers in the state as has been the custom for many years. The supplements this year will contain many interesting things such as as new school laws, the auto tax law, etc. They will prove valuable for reference, and should be preserved.

It is Woman, Lovely Woman.

One of the shocks that come to men when they are past twenty-one is the realization that woman's greatest interest is woman. No matter how white the spats nor how shiny the topper a man may take to the races, do they attract the feminine eye? The answer is in the negative. The feminine eye is searching for more important things. It is noting frocks and the wearing thereof. If an enterprising publisher started a men's magazine, would he publish portraits of men? He might intersperse a few horses [illegible] but the [illegible] women [illegible]

Stroll With Morgan Gave Credit.

An acquaintance once approached the first J. P. Morgan and asked for a loan of $10,000. Morgan knew the man was responsible, but for private reasons did not want to make the loan himself. He did, however, say he would secure the money for him, relates Collier's. Putting on his hat and coat, he asked the man to go with him. They started at Broad and Wall streets, walked through Wall to Broadway, and back to Broad. Morgan did not stop anywhere, nor ask anyone to lend his companion $10,000. At the door of his office Morgan shook hands with the man and bade him good day. "But," objected the applicant, "you didn't get me the $10,000." "Oh, yes, I did," said Morgan. "Anybody down there," waving toward Wall street, "will let you have it now."

A FIRESIDE TALE

By JENNIE LITTLE

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Another story, child dear? Sure 'tis overdrawn like the Ponsi fella's my fund will be, with such a demand. Well then, come with me, of an evening that I have in mind, to a grand concert hall in the city. A wonderful prima donna, the idol of her audiences in two continents, has come up on the stage for her last number. As she stands waiting for the applause to die away, something that she reads in the waves of upturned faces moves her to a sudden impulse, and with a tender little smile, instead of the classical selection on the program, her voice second only in sweetness to the angels fills the vast room with:

"There's a pretty spot in Ireland,
I always claim for my land."

In one of the boxes sat two of the earth's prosperous, and like a lightning artist, the man's mind flashed picture after picture on his memory's screen. In faraway County Clare he saw a young gossoon full to the brim of the sheer joy of living. The Scotch would call him a lad o' parts, the English a topping chap, but I'll declare to you that he was just a regular broth of a boy. Every old granny in the village, and clear down to every lass, thought the sun had its rising and setting in his merry charm, but only Eileen McDonagh had a mortgage on his affections. Ah, but she was the winsome colleen, and the likes of her was not to be found in a day's travel.

Then an uncle in America sent money for his passage, with tales of success that set the lad wild to go. Eileen must stay with her old folks, but when he had a good start, then he would send for her, and together they would conquer this fine new country.

"My heart goes back there daily,
To the girl I left behind me.
When we kissed and said good-by."

Ah, yes, at first 'twas so. Luck and pluck were with him, and his foothold grew firmer and stronger, and somehow in the struggle, Eileen drifted further into the background of his thoughts. The old bodies went one by one, and the black sorrow of loneliness was almost more than she could abide, but never did her sweetheart grow bitter or complaining in its wearying for him. Faithful and true she was to her troth with Terence O'Neill.

"Where dear old Shannon's flowing,
Where the three-leaved Shamrock grows,
Where my heart is I am going
To my little Irish Rose.
And the moment that I meet her,
With a hug and kiss I'll greet her—"

Conscience woke up entirely, and a shillalah stroke was gentle compared to the pain she gave him. For in these latest months of his prosperity he had decided that only a high-born, cultured American woman could rule his home and help to find new fields for his never-satisfied ambitions, and, cold-bloodedly, without a thought of love, he had set about to win her. This very minute, by his side, sat the lady of his worldly choice, and he had felt much elated that now she seemed not a great deal averse to his gallant attentions. Sure, she never knew about that common past, and almost had he forgotten its connection with the aristocratic banker who looked at him from the mirror. Till tonight, that is.

"Sure no letter I'll be mailing,
For soon will I be sailing,
And I'll bless the ship that takes me
To my dear old Erin's shore."

The lady turned with a disdainful curl of the lip. "Really," says she, "one might expect the best music here and not vulgar street songs," and Terence's heart turned over with a thud of gratitude that wisdom had come not too late.

Very quiet was he on the way home, and as he handed her from the limousine, declined her gracious invitation with a "Not tonight, thank you, as I have pressing business to attend to immediately. And I probably will not see you again for some time, as I leave on the Canopic's next date of sailing."

"Indeed," said the lady, in displeased surprise. "Surely this is very sudden."

"I've not yet booked my passage," says Terence, with an old-time Irish grin, "but I think the fates won't fail me this time." And neither did they.

And now we come to a matchless evening in dear old Killaloe—a night of enchanted moonlight, when all the fairies and little folk are casting their spells on everything. All alone at her window sits Eileen, with the melting sweetness of her harp suiting her voice as she sings so sadly, "It may be years, and it may be forever." And into the room strides Terence of her thoughts.

"Not on your life!" says he in the true American style, and then dropped on his knees beside her, and into the tender old brogue. "Mavourneen, all this time I've been madly, foolishly following a will-o'-the-wisp, but when I came to me senses and gave me heart the lead, it brought me to my own [illegible] Will ye go back with me, darlin', to be the [illegible] of me life till [illegible]

TO SAVE CANADIAN BEAVERS

[illegible] Valuable Fur-Bearing Animals Can Be Raised Established in That Country.

Trapping has been one of the principal occupations in Canada for centuries and from this source has been derived much of the wealth of that country. But there, as in other lands, in recent years the activities of the trappers have overtaken and passed the supply of fur-bearing animals, remarks the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle. In the last few years the trappers have come within measurable distance of exterminating the creatures upon which they depend for a living. During all the years the beaver has been a standard source of fur supply, and the beaver is close to extinction. This animal has played so large a part in Canadian commercial history that it has obtained a permanent place on the national insignia.

It is, therefore of more than passing interest to note that an effort is being made to stop the work of extinction through the medium of beaver farms, where the animals are cultivated and protected. Where it has been tried this has seemed to prove a profitable investment. One beaver farm established on Prince Edward island last year sold its supply of pelts for from $40 to $60 each. Thus business acumen may do what sentiment could not accomplish and save the beaver from complete extermination.

STUBBORNNESS

By ADDIE GRAVES

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

They had not spoken to each other for twenty-two years, and during that time nine children had been born to them. When the first child was two years old they had had a bitter exchange of words—taunts that could not be forgiven on either side. But a short time after the fierce quarrel the second child entered this world, so, although both had sworn never to speak "until their dying day," they continued to live together as man and wife. This happened years ago, when a divorce was a very rare proceeding and a home was seldom deserted, even by the greatest provocation.

When they were married he was nineteen and she sixteen. So, at the end of twenty-two years both were still young. It was strange that youth could be so stubborn. This was explained by their Puritan ancestry, from which they inherited the iron-bound obstinacy they termed principle. The spoken word must be kept at any cost.

It was a strange life, but during all these years the tragedies, accidents and comedies of existence had not broken the silence. It was an exceedingly odd but not unpleasant experience to visitors to enter into such a home life. Contrary to expectations, the family were exceptionally entertaining, all being fine musicians and persons of culture, making them agreeable companions. In fact, the household was noted for its charming hospitality.

Any information required or which was desired given by the parents was transferred through the children by word of mouth, or, if too young, the subject matter was written and delivered in that form. It was quite convenient, there were so many children. Neither parent tried to lower the other in the estimation of the children; it was simply a case of each keeping his dignity preserved and his word intact. There were weddings and death in the home, but even these did not alter the situation. If the house had burned it would still have been the same.

All the children "turned out" exceedingly well, the eldest developing into a skilful surgeon. One day in summer he and his wife were visiting the old homestead, which was situated in the country. The weather was exceptionally hot—so hot that no one had been able to sleep well for several nights. The doctor made some lemonade and took it out to the family, who were all sitting under the twin maples in the front yard. In a short time it was noticed that the father was sleeping. Not until supper was ready did anyone try to wake him. When it was tried he could not be roused. Alarmed, they carried him to the house and laid him on a couch in the living room. The doctor-son stayed with him until the others finished the hurried meal, when the sleeper awoke. He looked at his son and inquired what had happened.

"I think, father, your heart may be a little wrong—don't you think—in case anything should happen—you had better tell mother your wishes?"

A surprising look of gladness—for a dying person—flashed over the father's face.

"Yes, son, bring mother."

But mother's face was twisted with grief as she threw herself upon the prostrate form.

"Mary!"—"John!"—simultaneously.

The doctor left the room and appeared to the astounded children with a wide grin on his face.

"They are having a heavenly time in there," directing his thumb toward the door he had just emerged from—"the sweetest honeymoon—they are the mushiest, spooniest couple you could imagine. I gave father a stiff dose of bromide in his lemonade; there's not a thing ails him. I just took advantage of a good opportunity. Pretty rough treatment to cause a man to think he might be dying, but I thought the case needed and deserved it."

Replanting North Woods.

There are people who have never been above Troy, N. Y., who nevertheless speak wistfully of the north woods. They have been expecting to visit that inspiring wilderness for years and will plan for it for years to come, whether they ever go or not. If they knew how dangerously those reaches of forest, though they seem almost endless, have been threatened by fire and the pulp mill's maw they would rejoice to hear that Quebec now is planting two pine or spruce trees for every one that is destroyed.

So the north woods will still be there when at last your hunting trip is made. Three million pines and spruces have been planted this year.

Beavers Multiply Rapidly.

Beavers in the national forests have increased rapidly within the last few years, a count made by rangers of the forest service, United States Department of Agriculture, shows. Two years ago in the [illegible] forest in northwestern Colorado there were 200 beaver houses, estimating four or five inhabitants to each house, [illegible]

FREED FROM TURKISH YOKE

Chaldeans Promised a Measure of Independence Under the Guiding Hand of France.

The American army officer chosen by the Chaldeans to present their appeal for independence to the council of allied premiers reports that he has been unable to get a hearing for that ancient people. They made some attempt during the peace conference to obtain consideration, having heard that "self determination" was to be a guiding principle in the settlement of the world's affairs. Those at Versailles who had some familiarity with Biblical history may have recalled the Chaldeans, of course, but they failed to make an impression on minds surcharged with acute problems of twentieth century statesmanship.

The Chaldeans, or Babylonians, however, may count on being better off than has been their lot for many centuries. They will get some benefit from the new era. Residing in northern Mesopotamia, which France now will control—the southern region being conceded to Great Britain—they will be freed from their old oppressors, the Turks, and the French government has indicated a purpose to give them a measure of autonomy. The Chaldeans were once a warlike people capable of demanding what they desired. More than 1,000,000 of them are now said to be dwelling in the region that will be redeemed from Turkey.

DESIRED TO TAKE THE VEIL

Oldest Daughter of Thomas Jefferson Attracted by Quiet Life Within Convent Walls.

Martha Jefferson, oldest daughter of Thomas Jefferson, third President of the United States, came near to being a catholic sister. She was a student at the school of Abbaye de Panthemont at the time the French Revolution was in progress. The daring and flippant infidelity of the French frightened and disgusted her, and she clung to the calm and serene life of the convent with all her strength. Her mother had taught her in the ways of the Church of England, but the surroundings at the school overreached this, and she decided to become a nun.

She wrote to her father asking his permission to adopt the veil. No answer came for several days, and then Jefferson appeared in person. He greeted the girl with a tender smile, interviewed the abbess, and then came out and told the girl to pack her things. Her school life was ended at that moment, and the next day she was introduced to society and made the mistress of her father's household. She declared years afterward that neither she nor her father had ever alluded to the subject by a single word from that day on.

Of the Ancient Writers.

The excellence of the ancient writers does not consist in a trick that can be learned, but in a perfect adaptation of means to ends. The secret of the style of the great Greek and Roman authors is that it is the perfection of good sense. In the first place, said John Stuart Mill, they never use a word without a meaning or a word which adds nothing to the meaning; they knew what they wanted to say and their whole purpose was to say it with the highest degree of exactness and completeness and bring it home to the mind with the greatest possible clearness and vividness. The ancients were concise because of the extreme pains they took with their epithets; almost all moderns are prolix because they do not. The great ancients could express a thought so perfectly in a few words or sentences that they did not need to add any more.

Mexicans Are Great Walkers.

There is a saying in Europe that the Spaniards are the champion walkers of the world, and certainly their descendants in America, the Mexicans, are the champions of the new world. Three nights every week there is a concierto in the main downtown plaza in Monterey and nearly all the Americans in town, including many big, husky transients on the way to or from Tampico, sit on the park benches and watch in wonder while the Mexicans walk.

All the young people in town, it appears, walk around and around and around that plaza, the boys in one direction and the girls in the opposite direction, while their parents and chaperons and a few aged people share the benches with the husky Americans.

Remorseful Ghost.

A pathetic story is told of the ghost of Bisham abbey. It is said that the wife of Sir Thomas Hoby was unnaturally severe with her son, who, it seems, had a peculiar aversion to writing, and in his obstinacy would wilfully blot his copybooks. One day, the mother, enraged at his perverseness, lost her self-control and beat the poor boy so unmercifully that he died from his injuries. Since then one of the bedrooms in the abbey has been haunted by the specter of the cruel woman, who [illegible]

HEART CAN FEEL NO PAIN

But Vital Organ Sends Out Its Message of Warning When Physical Danger Threatens.

The heart has no nerves of sensation, Stanley M. Rinehart, M. D., writes in the Saturday Evening Post. If the surgeon could get to it without cutting through the sensory nerves on the surface of the body he could operate upon the heart itself without causing pain. And yet pain is sometimes a symptom of heart disease, but it is produced in a roundabout way.

If the heart cannot feel, how can there be pain in heart disease? Branches of the heart nerves go to certain subcenters in the spinal cord, and there they connect with the superficial nerves of sensation. Continued irritation of the heart nerves is thus communicated to the surface nerves and there is reflex or referred pain, not in the heart, but in the chest wall over which the sensory nerves are distributed.

True heart pain is always due to exhaustion of the heart muscle and may be recognized by the presence of other symptoms. It is made worse by the slightest exertion; by anything that increases the rapidity of the heart's contractions. And nearly always the respirations are labored and deep, expressing the desire of the sluggish blood stream for more air. But the pain is in the chest wall, never in the heart.

More significant than pain is a feeling of contraction, of tightness in the chest behind the breastbone, which may be experienced by those of middle age. It is especially noticeable after a full meal, after smoking or during exertion. This is another of nature's quiet warnings. It usually accompanies high blood pressure, with or without hardening of the arteries. The more often the sensation recurs and the more easily it is induced, the more attention it demands.

REAL BUSINESS.

The Smiths were moving and selling some things they did not need in the new home. Mrs. S—— found an old gas lamp. Now in their new home they were to have electricity, so, knowing it would no longer be of use, she turned to ten-year-old Teddy and said: "Ted, take this over to Mrs. B—— and try to sell it. Get a half dollar for it if you can. If you can't, take a quarter."

Teddy took it over to Mrs. B——. "Here's a lamp mother said to sell to you for a half dollar if you wanted to pay that, and if you don't you can have it for a quarter," he said.

Needless to say, he came home with a quarter.

Eyebrows Tell a Story.

An Indian doctor has been making a study of the eyebrow, and he has found that in dementia praecox there are nearly always short, bushy hairs nearly meeting in the space between the eyebrows and a noticeable thinning toward the external side. In epileptic women the eyebrow is made up of two portions; the inside is in the form of a comma, of which the tail enters in the two branches of the external portion in the form of a Y. In epileptic men one often sees large tufted, heavily haired eyebrows, united at the median line. In maniac depressive cases the absence of the outer third of the eyebrow is common.

DO MOST WORK ON THURSDAY

Statistics Show That British Factory Employees Are at Their Best About Midweek.

What is the best workday in America? In England it is Thursday.

That is the finding of industrial research board investigators of that country. The London Chronicle reports that over a period of twenty weeks the output was registered and "graphs" were made.

The workers gave their best on Wednesdays and Thursdays, but the output on Saturday was invariably low. When doubled (to equalize time) it is often less than 75 per cent of that on other days.

Another important conclusion was that the skilled workman is much more regular in his output than the worker not so well qualified. He does not get the "tired Saturday feeling" so soon.

In some factories the output arises until Friday, but among the less skilled workmen it was found that Thursday was the best working day.

An important consideration which the investigators kept in mind was that of the atmospheric condition in which work is done. Records of the air conditions have been taken with the output records.

In various plants the Saturday output was so low that employers found it unprofitable to operate, so they closed down. From this it would appear that on a half day the worker does not give the average of a half day of production.—Richard Spillane in the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

BOMBAY A CITY OF BEGGARS

Government Is Planning Severe Measures to Repress Nuisance That Is Becoming Intolerable.

Some time ago the government of Bombay appointed a committee to consider and formulate proposals for the purpose of suggesting practical measures whereby the ever-growing nuisance of professional beggary might be abolished. The committee has now completed its investigation and has issued a report.

The report shows that there are in Bombay city alone 5,000 professional beggars, and the beggars in other parts bring the total for the presidency to over 60,000. The general conclusions of the committee are that there must be introduced at the earliest opportunity an act for the prevention of professional beggary, which will be applicable to the whole of the presidency.

Sadhus and fakirs, it is suggested, should be exempt from the operations of the act, which it is proposed should make begging a cognizable offense.

Those who have visited India will doubtless recall with feelings of horror the terrible sights they have witnessed of beggars, many of them physical wrecks and suffering from loathsome diseases, seated about the roads soliciting alms from passersby.—From the Times of India.

CIVIC ORDINANCE IN JAPAN

All Houses Have Tablet Telling Name of the Responsible Dweller Within the Walls.

In Japan you can learn a good many things about the resident of a house merely by looking at his door. According to police regulations, says a writer in Chambers' Journal the entrance to every residence must have a small wooden tablet affixed to it. This tablet has the name and the number of the house on it, and on another tablet is the name of the responsible householder, who in many cases is an infant, a younger brother or a relative.

Sometimes, though rarely, the names of other inmates are placed over the door, but there is no police regulation that requires it, except in the case of boarding houses, which have to place their boarders' names outside for all to see. A person fortunate enough to possess a telephone always has the number proudly displayed over his entrance. Near it you will often see a

Fresh Vegetables Best.

That raw food contains more of the protective elements than cooked food was shown by an experiment with pigeons fed a grain diet which had been heated to destroy the protective elements. They developed beri-beri in from 40 to 80 days. Other pigeons receiving raw potato in addition to heated grain were in excellent condition during the 500 days of the experiment. The protective value of fresh raw potato was contrasted with that of dried potato in another experiment, and the results indicated that while dried vegetables are not without value as a protection against beri-beri, yet fresh vegetables are very much better.

Shevlin System
9/10ths of the Homes are built on Borrowed Money

SHEVLIN SYSTEM

If most of us had to wait until we had saved enough to buy a home, we would spend the greater part of our lives in rented quarters or in some old tumbled-down house without a modern convenience.

But, fortunately, money for home-building can as a rule be easily secured and the investor considers money loaned on a home as one of the very best risks.

The man with ambition to own his home is a good moral risk and unless unusual misfortune overtakes him, he will meet his obligations. His sense of pride, of love for his family, of comfort, all prompt him to make whatever sacrifices are necessary to meet his payments.

Come in and talk it over. We may be able to help you realize your ambition to own a home. We may be able to show you how a home can be financed.

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Ford Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in price at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached on the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

Local Women Seek Divorce

The biggest scandal which, no doubt, has ever been brought to light in this community, has developed within the past few days, when it was learned that the wives of a number of local men have begun divorce proceedings.

The estrangement between these husbands and wives are causing a wide attention. The interest being particularly intense in this vicinity where all parties concerned are well known.

It has been learned from reliable sources that the women seeking divorce have placed their case before an attorney. Alimony will be demanded. The men implicated in the affair claim they are innocent as it is purely a grave misunderstanding. It appears the trouble is due to several young men who on a fishing trip had in their company a certain actress. This fact in some manner became known to the wives of these men.

We withhold the names of the persons involved in this scandal for the present. You may see the development of affairs at the Imperial Hall on Friday evening the 18th in "HER GLOVES." A home talent play given for the benefit of the St. Hilaire Athletic Club. A farce full of side splitting situations, written and played for the purpose of making you scream. Community Club Has Fine Meeting

Meeting of the Community Club held last Friday evening was the largest in point of attendance since the club was organized. A program consisting of vocal and instrumental music was rendered, and a comical little playlet was put on by pupils of the school. County Agent McCann gave a very interesting address on club work and results to be gained from it. He was followed by a Dr. Gale who was formerly employed in welfare and relief work in New York City. Dr. Gale gave some first hand information about conditions in the city, and also gave some very pointed reasons why young folks should think twice before leaving their homes in this part of the country to seek a fortune in the cities. Last but not least on the program was the appearance of the famous "Million Dollar Band" which was greatly enjoyed by all present. The Ladies' Aid of the Swedish Lutheran church served lunch in the domestic science room immediately after close of the program.

Less than half a century ago almost every American community west of the Mississippi was protected against Indian raids by a fort or stockade. Most of these structures have now fallen into dust, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. In southern Utah, however, is a stone structure, known as "Cove Port," which was built in 1867, at the time of the Blackhawk-Mormon war, yet is today in a state of perfect preservation. It is now used, in fact, as a ranch house and hotel.

Sandalwood Long Prized.

Sandalwood is the product principally of the native state of Mysore, India, and the district of Coorg. Due to the development of the sandalwood oil extracting industry, the exportation of the wood from Madras has steadily declined, while that of the oil has increased. Sandalwood is the most famous of all scented woods. Its use for perfumery and incense dates back thousands of years. The later Greeks regarded it as one of their greatest luxuries, and no festivities were complete without it. Sandalwood figures prominently in religious ceremonies and burial rites in China and other oriental countries.

HELPED PAY AMERICA'S DEBT

How Mrs. Monroe Was Instrumental in Saving the Life of Madame Lafayette.

An interesting sidelight on history lies in the story of how the wife of James Monroe, fifth President, saved the life of Madame Lafayette at the time Monroe was American ambassador to France. Lafayette himself was in prison in Germany, and kept in a foul dungeon. Mme. Lafayette had been seized by the Revolutionists, and was confined in the prison of La Force, and a date had been set for her execution. The Monroes were very much alive to the great debt America owed the young aristocrat, and Mrs. Monroe determined to do what she could.

She ordered the state coach of the embassy, with its flaring coat of arms, to deliver her to the doors of the prison of La Force, and once there, calmly requested an interview with the unfortunate prisoner. An interview with a person sentenced to the knife was unheard of, but the dawning power of the United States was such that the officials dared not refuse the request of the ambassador's wife. A few words were exchanged between the women, and Mrs. Monroe drove away. The next morning she was liberated, the French Revolutionists fearing to execute her, and desiring thus to secure the friendly attention of the new nation. It was a daring thing to do, for the results might have been disastrous and all sorts of international complications might have arisen.

Nobody Wants Bungler.

There's no place in progress for the bungler. The business man gets rid of the bungler as soon as he can. No organization wants the bungler on its rolls. Furthermore there's little excuse for the presence of such a nuisance. Above all there is no excuse for you to muss things up. You will do that occasionally in spite of yourself, because you are falsely reported, misunderstood or over-zealous. But you don't have to make a regular thing of it. Correct the past by a more careful present and you will be wiser through the mistake. So toe in, my boy, and make good. You have the world before you and your friends are waiting to help you celebrate the victory.—Grit.

Making Joss Sticks.

The composition of the candles called joss sticks, which are used in all the religious ceremonies of Buddhism, has long remained a mystery the preparation of the sticks being intrusted to certain persons chosen from a limited class. Not long ago, however, there was learned the manner of making joss sticks in Indo-China. A stem of bamboo is rolled into a preparation containing 14 different odoriferous drugs, two of which are significant, as showing a knowledge of chemical and physical properties. These are aconite, which serves to protect the sticks against the attacks of rats and mice, and camphor, which causes them to burn steadily without being periodically extinguished.

PRELIMINARY TRY-OUT.

"I suppose the treating custom has disappeared?"

"Not entirely," said Uncle Bill Bottletop. "I have noticed that when anybody buys a flask of alleged liquor from a stranger he always likes to let a friend take the first drink while he stands by and watches the effect."

"Who was it that wrote the line, 'A little learning is a dangerous thing'?" asked the Old Fogy.

PRESENTS [illegible]

[illegible]

In England when a daughter of the nobility is married her wedding presents are usually [illegible]. The following list of gifts is clipped from the London Times notice of the approaching marriage of Mr. Cecil Brassey and Hon. Ivy Spencer.

A beaver fur coat from the Viscount Churchill to his daughter and a diamond and pearl pendant from the bridegroom; a gold cigarette case from her sister Hon. Ursula Spencer; a diamond tiara from Lady Violet Brassey; an old antique bowl and spoon from the duke and duchess of Buccleuch; a feather fan from Viscountess Northcliffe; a diamond brooch from the duchess of Marlborough; a glass-top table from the speaker and Mrs. James Lowther; a pair of silver candlesticks from Hon. Lancelot and Mrs. Lowther; a pair of silver entree dishes from Hon. Victor Spencer; a Chinese bag from Lady Sarah Wilson; a large silver tray from the earl of Lonsdale; a ruby and diamond brooch from the maharajah of Cooch Behar; a feather from the duke of Marlborough; a pearl and diamond brooch from Sir Ernest Cassel; a set of dessert knives and forks from Mrs. Victor Spencer; two silver baskets from Lord and Lady Ludlow; a dessert service from Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Brassey, and a pair of silver salvers from Mr. Edwin Brassey.

A number of wedding presents received by the bridegroom include a silver kettle from the duke and duchess of Northumberland and a silver inkstand from the employees at Apethorpe hall.

Sausages.

Surprising as it may seem, there are 1,700 different varieties of sausages in the world today. All nationalities love certain national dishes, and some form of sausage seems included in the cuisine of every country. China makes sausages, and very good ones, from the eastern point of view. Germany is pre-eminently a sausage-eating nation. Great quantities of this food are consumed by the people of Latin countries. In Italy and France they are eaten more as a relish than as a dish, and the noonday meal often commences with thin slices of cold sausage, flanked with a few olives and a pat of fresh butter. Sausages in France are associated with certain fete days, and a kind of blood sausage is always served at the Christmas eve supper. Neither is sausage a modern food, born of economy and the utilizing of meat scraps. The town of Koenigsburg, Germany, in 1558, celebrated the national dish by making a bologna sausage more than 600 feet long.

Tree Has Many Uses.

For the coco-palms are found more uses than perhaps any other tree in the world, says the American Forestry association. This tree booms like a gun when blooming and provides the applejack of the tropics for the natives as well as its own burglar alarm to keep thieves away from its fruit. It is said by the people whom it furnishes with nearly all the necessaries of life that it has as many uses as there are days in the year; but that seems to be an under-estimate, for surely three hundred and sixty-five necessities would never meet the demand of modern, up-to-date man or woman of the temperate zone.

Fresh Vegetables Best.

That raw food contains more of the protective elements than cooked food was shown by an experiment with pigeons fed a grain diet which had been heated to destroy the protective elements. They developed beri-beri in from 40 to 80 days. Other pigeons receiving raw potato in addition to heated grain were in excellent condition during the 500 days of the experiment. The protective value of fresh raw potato was contrasted with that of dried potato in another experiment, and the results indicated that, while dried vegetables are not without value as a protection against beri-beri, yet fresh vegetables are very much better.

MICKIE SAYS

Speed and Service

[illegible] HUSBAND'S DUTY

[illegible]

"Puzzled husband" writes us that he is sorely tried by his wife's ambition to bake the family bread and other things. His domestic affection and spirit of chivalry will not permit him to tell his wife the truth—that the bread is almost as heavy as a paving stone and quite as indigestible. So he goes to work every morning with a heavy heart and an even heavier stomach, and is bedeviled with gripes and abdominal pains all day, Greene M. Farley writes in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Not only that, but his wife is a constant reader of domestic science departments and she uses him as an experiment station. This last week, he says, he had biscuits that would do for sinkers on a fish line and an angel cake that could not be differentiated from old putty. The heartrending feature is that she asks him with a bright smile how he likes it all, and he cannot find it in his breast to tell the truth about it; so he lies frankly and wholeheartedly.

All this is getting on his nerves and on his stomach and on his conscience.

In the course of a little time he feels his life insurance is going to be due.

Should he tell her the truth, or should he suffer in silence and let her go ahead and collect the life insurance?

If life is worth anything to him he might conclude to tell her the truth and let her go ahead and procure her divorce. She might find a second husband with a cast-iron digestive apparatus and the present husband ought not to stand in the way of his wife's career as a domestic scientist.

ONE DAY

By MARY J. HITCHCOCK

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Oliver Bryne ran his car down to the turn in the woodland road. Then his horn barked a greeting to the blue-clad figure hurrying toward the car. The woman waved her hand in response.

"Come, help me over the fence," she called.

With a conscious quickening of pulses the man lifted her over. She laughed up into his face.

"Did I keep you waiting? I tried to be on time."

"I was afraid—"

"For me—or of me?" With the question her laughter rang out. Her eyes challenged him.

"The Queen rides out today," he quoted softly as he helped her into the car.

"Where?" as she snuggled down beside him.

He named an inn some miles away.

"But why go there?"

"Well, one must eat; and I remember that you love to dance—"

"You wouldn't like it?"

He leaned to her. "Not for a single minute, but—"

"We won't go, then."

"Well, where?"

She told him and he stared at her, wondering.

"You told me you never wanted to see that place again—that you wanted to forget—"

"That was more than a month ago."

"You mean that now you don't—?"

"What would you forget—if you could?"

"First of all that my wife has decided to divorce me."

"You're sorry?"

"As the devil!" explosively. "And for all the sins of omission and commission that made her think she would be happier without me."

And now she could not look at him though she tried. "You say these things—and to me!" she managed in smothered tones.

"To you first of all! Allie—" He leaned to her again, his breath hot on her cheek.

"There's the place!" she cried, conscious even as she spoke that it was a mistake. Then, in a rush of swift confusion: "Perhaps you can't help being yourself, but, I should think you'd get tired of your own willfulness at times."

"Do I need to confess it?" She glanced at him with slant eyes. "I got tired long before you showed me—"

"That your wife was tired of finding you always cross and impatient. You can be awfully crabbed!" she interposed.

"I haven't a doubt of it!" The new air of humility sat well upon him. "But it's the nature of a crab to present a hard outside—they get softer and sweeter the deeper you go."

She smiled through humid eyes. "It's because I've begun to realize that—that I am running away with you like this."

"Are we running away—?"

"Don't you know—?"

"There!" He slowed for the stop as she leaned forward, seeking out with eager glance the little rustic house among the trees. "It looks just as it did that first time we came here. But you've taken the name down!"

"Why not? Honeymoon Camp doesn't seem fitting—now."

"But it looks as if it might be related to a honeymoon even now."

"Open the door, please. I'm going in."

"Don't you realize that you can't—you ought not?"

"Are you going to prevent it?"

"All right, but I warned you," said Bryne.

"We'll have lunch," she said, tugging at the side hampers. "Take them in, please."

"We'd better start back as soon as possible," he said, as they pushed back their chairs.

She looked up quickly. "I'm not going back."

"But you can't stay here—alone!"

"I planned on having you for company."

He checked the impulse to draw her into his arms.

"If that's all—we must get back before dark."

"You—you—want to go?"

"Only for your sake," as quietly as his bounding pulses would allow. "I'll wait outside if you'll hurry."

She let him go. Then, picking up a magazine—relic of their former visit—she sat down at the window, pretending to read. Presently she looked up, smiling as she met the accusing look in his eyes. He did not suspect that she had let him stand in the doorway while she appeared to be absorbed in the story.

"The gasoline—it's all run out!" His tone accused as well as his eyes. "You—"

"And if I did?" she asked, shamelessly.

"But why—?"

Already he knew what her answer would be. But he listened eagerly, breathlessly, [illegible] for the broken [illegible]

DOG HERO OF CONFLAGRATION

Instrumental in Saving His Owner's Flock of Sheep From Death in Burning Sheds.

Rover, a shepherd dog owned by Isadore Nollet, St. Paul Park, Minn., was the hero of a $70,000 fire, in which 1,300 sheep were burned to death and four sheds, 40 box cars of feed and large quantities of machinery destroyed recently.

Agnes Nollet, the seventeen-year-old daughter of Mr. Nollet, was busily engaged studying her school lessons late at night. Rover began barking. His continuous barking attracted the attention of Agnes to the window. Looking out, she discovered the sheds ablaze.

Awakening her father and other members of the family, they rushed to the sheds. More than 7,000 sheep locked up in the sheds were in immediate danger of being burned to death.

Opening the gates, Nollet sent Rover in to drive the sheep out of the sheds. Minding his master, the dog did his work faithfully, and as a result more than 6,000 head of sheep were rushed to safety. Rover's hair was slightly burned as a result of his efforts.

Christmas day in Africa! And what a dream of beauty and color, blue sea, blue sky, groves of eucalyptus and olive trees, climbing roses, white-robed Arab women closely veiled, their eyes only showing, bare brown legs and feet, sometimes a silver bracelet on one leg, donkey boys with a nondescript, flowing garment, a red fez on their heads; color everywhere. Our villa is charming, stands in a little wood of eucalyptus trees, with a big garden, balconies, terraces and marble steps, large, high rooms and lovely views on all sides, Mme. Waddington writes from Algiers to Scribner's. It is quite in the country, five or six kilometers from Algiers, very high up in the hills. Very few people live in the town and the whole hillside is studded with villas, Moorish almost all, dazzling white, flat roofs and narrow windows. Quite at the top, where we are, there are some very comfortable Eastern modern houses. I am writing at my window, which gives on a terrace, from which there is a divine view of the sea and the snow mountains of the Djurjura, miles away in Kabylie, and from one corner through the faded drooping leaves of the eucalyptus I have a glimpse of the town of Algiers, lying a long white streak far below.

The drawing room is a delightful room, runs all the width of the house, with windows on three sides, so that we always have the sun. The furniture is sketchy, not much of it, and what there is is very ugly, but when the Paris cases arrive, with a few tables and chairs and silver, the room will look very different. There are some carpets in the house, which are absolutely necessary, as all the floors are tiled. However, Charlotte has done wonders with the meager material she had.

Seniors: Rah! Rah! Rah!

The Freshman class rendered a fine program during assembly Tuesday morning.

The new tennis court was finished early last week and since then it has been in constant use. Not only does it provide recreation for the teachers and pupils, but it improves the appearance of the school grounds to a marked degree. A great deal of interest is being taken in the game and we are almost certain of being represented by a team at the Field Meet at Middle River, May 21.

Professor Speilmann Von Musikmeister and his Million Dollar Band scored a big "hit" at the Community Club program Friday evening. It is not customary for this band to play at small cities the size of St. Hilaire, but thru some good fortune they were detained on their tour, and in order to keep his players "busy," the celebrated professor consented to favor the peope of St. Hilaire and vicinity with a few selections. This band has lately received an invitation from the Prince of Wales to make a tour in his country, but Musikmeister refused to make the trip for fear seasickness and changes of climate might effect the playing ability of the members of the band.

CAT SCORED USUAL VICTORY

Japanese Legend' Merely Another Feather in the Cap of the Ever-Conquering Feline.

There is an enchanting story told by the Lady Sei Shonagon, a beauty of Japan of nine centuries past, of the emperor's favorite cat — herself a spoiled beauty. She had received a cap of honor and had been raised to the third rank of nobility, with the title of Wiyobu-no-Ototo, or "Chief of the Female Attendants," and was a cat of many graces. Unfortunately, on a day of disobedience, her lady-in-waiting summoned the emperor's dog, Okinamaru, to startle her into good behavior. He barked obediently, and the cat dashed madly behind the screen, where his majesty sat at breakfast, and sought refuge in his arms. The emperor, much shocked, sent for the lord high chamberlain, and pronounced sentence on poor Okinamaru. A thrashing and exile! The Lady Sei describes him as hitherto a happy dog and much esteemed. But a short time before he had been carried in a procession in a willow litter, with peach blossoms and hollyhocks on his head! He was now an outcast on dog island, "and none so poor to do him reverence." He may possibly have found life easier without the hollyhocks, but it is interesting to see that the eternal cat is victorious as ever. The dog is vanquished; the lady-in-waiting ruined, and the cat lies in the emperor's lap and purrs. So was it always; so will it ever be, writes L. Adams Beck in Asia Magazine.

Isn't the Law Wonderful!

A Belgian paper tells of a woman living at Mons who is denied a marriage license, because she does not know her name, age or birthplace and therefore "has no legal existence."

The case is analagous to that of a man named Mahony who was hanged some years ago. When the prison physician pronounced him dead, the body was cut down and delivered to the relatives. Life was not extinct, however, and a few hours later the man was quite himself again. He was shot by a murderer some time afterward, but the assassin could not be brought to justice because, as the court said, "Mahony was legally dead, and therefore could not be killed subsequently by anybody."

Begone Dull Facts.

Two friendly little neighbors, aged respectively 4½ and 5 years, recently seated themselves on the curbstone near my windows for a religious discussion. It seemed they had overheard some grown-ups repeating a recent prophecy of a certain sect as to the imminent end of the world and were greatly exercised at the report. The elder child, a fair-haired skeptic from a northern state, scornfully declared that he didn't believe the story; but the swarthy, dark-eyed little Texan solemnly asserted: "Yes, it's true; I know it's true; foh this mo'nin' I read it in mah Bible." The midget doesn't know one letter of the alphabet from another, but he refuses to be pinned down to vulgar facts when his spirit wishes to soar. Are children of the period brighter than their predecessors? At his age I am sure I could not have fibbed with so solemn and convincing an air.—Los Angeles Times.

"LILACS"

By NELLIE A. FAIRBANKS

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Bill Curtis vigorously applied the old stubby brush broom to his well-worn suit, then stopped for a moment to gaze out across the great green fields.

For 16 years, weather permitting, Bill had watched and loved this time of day, when the sun was casting its last slanting rays.

Tonight he was leaving the home he loved so well and the man who had shared his home and with whom he had worked for 16 years. That was the hard part of going. Something that looked suspiciously like tears welled up in his honest blue eyes, and he gazed for a minute at the man at the sink, doing up the supper dishes. As a rule this man was talkative, but tonight he was strangely silent.

The arduous task of making an old suit look something like new was finally completed and Bill stepped out on the little platform that served as a piazza. He looked sadly at the two empty arm chairs.

"At the end of two days' journey I will be with Marcia again," and once more he could see the little white-clad figure as he left her that last evening. Again he could hear the soft sobbing as she begged him not to be away long, and Bill held her close as he whispered:

"When I have made the little fortune I have dreamed of, then I will come back to you. And when I do come back, Marcia, it will be in lilac-time, just like it is today."

The first few weeks had been unbearable to Bill; then as the months and years passed he fell into that rut of being perfectly satisfied with working hard all day and spending the long evenings with his faithful companion and his pipe.

His little pile of money grew bigger each year until he at last decided it was time to go back to the old home and Marcia. His heart beat faster as he pictured the little vision in white, and he sighed happily as he again entered the little cottage. But, his spirits drooped when he beheld Jim, sitting with his head resting in his two hands, a picture of despair. Going over, he placed his hand on Jim's shoulder and said:

"We've spent some very happy years here, old scout, but now I must be going back to Marcia. I wish you could see her, Jim—so small, with wavy tresses and—"

"Yes, but 16 years makes an awful difference, old man," Jim answered.

"Yes, yes," Bill murmured, half absently; "in some people, but not Marcia."

At last the time came when the comrades parted. Jim drove Bill over the two miles to the railroad station, and they silently pressed each other's hand, for neither could speak just then.

Jim drove back to the lonely cottage, seated himself in his arm chair beside the vacant one, and when the big full moon arose its beams fell on one lonely figure, and an empty chair.

In the meantime the train sped on towards Bill's old home and Marcia. His journey ended at noon two days later, but as Bill felt terribly romantic, he waited until the sun was setting, then Marcia must see him first by the lilac bush near her door. As he neared the house he wished he had kept corresponding all these years; but then, he felt sure Marcia loved him enough to watch and wait for him even though it was sixteen years.

He was almost at the gate when a sudden fear took possession of him. Things did not look just right. What if Marcia had gone away, or had died; but no, he must put such thoughts away. At the gate a piercing scream reached his ear—just as he was by the lilac tree, where Marcia must see him first—and two dirty-faced boys came rushing around the corner of the house, the larger one finally overtaking the other, and they immediately started a fist fight.

The door of the house opened quickly, and a woman, one who would easily tip the scales at two hundred, appeared in a soiled gingham dress, sleeves rolled to her elbows, exhibiting a pair of fat red arms thickly covered with white suds, and the equally red face showed plainly she had just emerged from the family washtub.

Bill rubbed his eyes and looked again. There might just have been an ordinary double chin attached to that face, but Bill could swear he saw four. He also noticed the thin, half gray locks, twisted into a little hard knot at the back of her head. Crushing the innocent lilac where he had a few moments before so romantically placed his hand, he stepped back a little farther.

There was no mistaking. The eyes proved it was Marcia, and if there was the least bit of doubt left in his mind, it disappeared when a man in overalls brushed past him and called out: "Hurry up and get my dinner, Marcia."

And Marcia was just starting back for the kitchen when she espied the man by the lilac bush. Raising her voice, she called out loudly:

"Get away from them lilacs or I'll call the dog."

Three days later Bill turned the corner of his own little cottage and peering through the window, beheld Jim in the act of setting two places at the table. [illegible]

HEART [illegible]

But Vital Organ [illegible] Message of Warning When [illegible] Danger Threatens.

The heart has no nerves of sensation, Stanley M. Rinehart, M. D., writes in the Saturday Evening Post. If the surgeon could get to it without cutting through the sensory nerves on the surface of the body he could operate upon the heart itself without causing pain. And yet pain is sometimes a symptom of heart disease, but it is produced in a roundabout way.

If the heart cannot feel, how can there be pain in heart disease? Branches of the heart nerves go to certain subcenters in the spinal cord, and there they connect with the superficial nerves of sensation. Continued irritation of the heart nerves is thus communicated to the surface nerves and there is reflex or referred pain, not in the heart, but in the chest wall over which the sensory nerves are distributed.

True heart pain is always due to exhaustion of the heart muscle and may be recognized by the presence of other symptoms. It is made worse by the slightest exertion, by anything that increases the rapidity of the heart's contractions. And nearly always the respirations are labored and deep, expressing the desire of the sluggish blood stream for more air. But the pain is in the chest wall, never in the heart.

More significant than pain is a feeling of contraction, of tightness in the chest behind the breastbone, which may be experienced by those of middle age. It is especially noticeable after a full meal, after smoking or during exertion. This is another of nature's quiet warnings. It usually accompanies high blood pressure, with or without hardening of the arteries. The more often the sensation recurs and the more easily it is induced, the more attention it demands.

Nominally the government of Bokhara is in the hands of the amir, who is an absolute autocrat, but actually power is largely exercised by the Mohammedan clergy. The houses in the capital are closely packed together, and everyone must be indoors by dusk. At night the streets are paraded by police patrols, who beat drums to scare away thieves and robbers. The city is surrounded by a ruined but still strong wall about 7½ miles in circumference. It is now reported that Bokhara has been captured by the Reds.

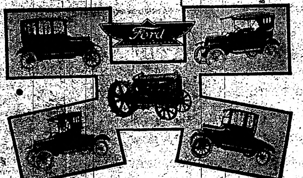
Since an adding-machine operator seldom looks at the keys after he has become familiar with them, it is evident that blindness need be no insuperable bar to the use of such an instrument, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. To remove what obstacles there are, a blind inventor in California has devised an attachment with which he is able to operate an adding machine, and read his totals without trouble. An auxiliary keyboard is mounted on two parallel rods above the regular keys, and the cover glass is removed from the totaling dial.

The Twilight Gate.

The Yomei gate at Nikko is magnificent. The ceiling of its entrance has a dragon gazing in eight directions, and the ceiling of the interior has a dragon gazing in four directions. The 12 pillars of the gate are of keyaki wood elaborately carved and inlaid with all kinds of precious woods. The beams are 20-cornered and each square is painted in minute designs. There are on this gate innumerable carvings of dragons and lions, all painted and lacquered profusely. One becomes so fascinated in studying the details that he tarries at the gate until the day wanes. Thus it has come to be called the Twilight gate.—Florence Peltier in Asia Magazine.



Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Ford Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in price at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached on the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

BREAK GROUND FOR CREAMERY

Excavation For Basement Under Way. Will Rush Building Work.

Work on the new, modern home of the St. Hilaire Co-operative Creamery Association was started Monday morning this week. It is expected the basement will be finished last of this week, and material is already on the ground for building forms for pouring the foundations. All material has been ordered shipped, and if all goes well, Contractor Carlson expects to have brick laying well under way by the first of next month.

When completed and equipped, the plant will be one the finest and most modern to be found in this part of the state. Stockholders of the association realize the urgent need for a new building and have planned one that will take care of its needs for many years to come. It takes courage and faith to go ahead with a project of this kind under present conditions, but the people in this vicinity have both as is evidenced by the new building now in course of construction.

Funeral Saturday

Funeral services for the late Will Demestrand were held from the family home west of town last Saturday afternoon. A large number of friends of the deceased went out from town to be present and most of the business places here were closed during the hours of the funeral. A profusion of beautiful flowers, tributes from many friends, covered the casket, showing the esteem in which Will was held by all who knew him.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferdie Brown and party of friends autoed down from Thief River Falls last Sunday for a visit at the Branum home.

Ole Peterson, who was a resident of this place some years ago, and who now makes his home near Plummer, drove over Tuesday for a couple days visit with his sisters, Mrs. Berglund and Mrs. D. Pattersen.

Critics throughout the country are loud in their praise of "TODAY", a great play, starring Florence Reed, which will be shown at the Imperial Theatre on Wednesday, May 18, at 8:30 p. m. Ada Patterson, of the New York American, says, "I regard 'TODAY' as the vindication of the motion picture, and none of the enemies of the silent drama can stand against it."

Some Auction!

The Spectator is indebted to Joe Patton for the following clipping taken from his old home paper. It is a copy of an old sale bill made at Harrisburg, Kentucky, before the Civil War. A line-up of this kind handed in at the present time would cause a commotion in most any print shop in the country. We reproduce it for the benefit of our readers, as follows:

"Having sold my farm and intending to move to Missouri will sell at public sale 1 mile west and four miles south of Harrisburg, Ky., on Saturday, September 26, 1850, the following described property, to-wit: One buck nigger, 25 years old, weight 210 pounds, 4 nigger wenches from 18 to 24 years old; 3 nigger boys 9 years old; 18 nigger hoes; one pine sled; 6 yokes of oxen well broke, 10 ox carts with six inch tires, one saddle pony 5 years old, one side saddle, 8 double shovel plows 10 and 12 inch, 25 one gallon whiskey jugs; 100 gallons of apple cider, one barrel of good sorghum, 2 barrels soap, 2 barrels of krout, one extra good nigger whip, 2 tons of tobacco 2 years old. Sale at 10:30. Terms cash. I need the money.

New Material for Silk.

Discovery has been made of a process by which the muscular tissue of horses and cattle can be converted into silk—a use being thus found for condemned cows and horses killed because of accident or old age. The flesh is softened by saturating it in a liquid, which separates the muscle fibers by dissolving the substance that holds them together. Then it is soaked in another liquid, which strengthens the fibers and gives them a silky character. Silk thus obtained can be rubberized and made waterproof by soaking it for some hours in a bath of rubber.

His accomplice got a similar task. Each must write 44,000 words as his punishment.

"Kosher" Meat.

According to Jewish law, the word "kosher" means "ceremoniously clean." All animals or fowls to be "koshered" are killed by a rabbi or his deputy, the chief difference between Jewish and Gentile slaughtering methods being that the Hebrew cuts the throat without first stunning the animal by a blow on the head, as is usually done in other than kosher killing. This seems to be based on the theory that the conscious animal bleeds more thoroughly than one that has been stunned, and, according to Jewish belief, no blood must remain in the meat when it is consumed. Partly in an effort to make this absence of blood doubly sure, the Jewish housewife usually salts her meat heavily and allows it to stand in the salt at least an hour. The salt is then washed off and the meat prepared for eating.

The Love of Color.

Vegetable dyes were used by the aborigines of all parts of America for ornamenting their utensils, staining their baskets and fabrics. Many of the textiles found in the prehistoric graves of Peru are remarkable for their beautiful and permanent colors. Few of these, unfortunately, can be traced to the plants from which they were derived. The introduction of foreign dyes has been disastrous. Their cheapness and the facility with which they can be transported has caused them to be widely adopted in place of native dyes, the preparation of which is fast becoming obsolete. The ancient Mexicans made use of a number of beautiful pigments, mostly vegetable, for the picture-writing of their celebrated codices. Nearly all of their colors can be identified.

Work That Is a Pleasure.

If one wants enough to complete a definite piece of work, be it poem, essay, story or some far more definite and prosaic task, I have found that it gets itself done in spite of the insistent pressure of other businesses and the deadening monotony of heavy routine, simply because one goes back to it with delight, schemes to clear time for it, waits for it round corners, and loses no time in spurring and whipping the mind to work, which is necessary in the cases of less attractive tasks. The moment that there comes a leisurely gap, the mind closes on the beloved work like a limpet; when this happens day after day and week after week, the accumulations become prodigious.—A. C. Benson.

The Ship's Husband.

Every ship has a husband and a wife. The "husband" is the person responsible for carrying out repairs, provisioning and other important details connected with the vessel while in dock and when preparing for a voyage. The "wife" is without doubt the sailor's "better half" during the voyage. It is the name given to the receptacle where Jack stores such useful things as needles, cotton, buttons and thread, with which he effects the necessary repairs to his garments. If this receptacle consists of a piece of material, rolled up with the various articles inside, it is generally known as a "housewife."

Beulah and Her Chicken Overcoats

By HAROLD SINCLAIRE

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

Miss Beulah Jones was cutting up a cake with a piece of silk thread to prove its lightness, as there came a knock at the door. She passed through the sitting room with many a hurried reach for scattered garments and fragments of cloth, in a hopeless effort at tidying up.

"I do hope it isn't the minister, or anybody but some neighbor," fluttered the neat and circumspect little lady.

"It's only me, Beulah," spoke the bluff voice of giantlike John Moore, her distant cousin. "About once a year I get around here. Why don't you ever come and see us, Beulah?"

"You know I never go anywhere—now," she said, briefly.

"Well," spoke John, plumping down into an easy chair. "I've heard some wonderful things about those pet chickens of yours, and I've come to find out about them. Well! Well! Well!"

His ruddy face began to pucker comically, and he let out a great guffaw.

"What are you laughing at, John Moore?" demanded Miss Beulah, with severity.

Her cousin could not reply for some time. Waddling around in the chicken yard a full score of Plymouth Rock chickens were parading proudly, attired in close-fitting overcoats.

"It's a great idea," said John; "but it's the funniest thing I ever saw."

"I don't see anything very funny about it," resented Miss Jones. "Some of the poor things froze up last winter. They shan't this."

John Moore grinned the harder as he strode to the window and again looked out. John Moore fancied he saw something spectacular in it all.

"I've got an idea, Beulah," he said. "I'm looking for a novelty, and that's what brought me here. I want to buy those chickens."

Miss Beulah regarded her cousin sharply and then suspiciously.

"They're not for sale," she declared at once.

"Then I want to borrow them—rent them, we'll call it. We are working up a procession," John went on to explain; "torchlights, music and all that. We're going to have a hayrack, showing prosperity—heaps of apples, corn, goddess of liberty and the like. I want to scatter those winter-clothed pets of yours over the load. It will be a great catch."

It proved a greater catch than the ingenious committeeman had expected. It was two days later when Miss Jones saw a wagon draw up to the yard. Her pets, well fed and lively, were being returned safe and sound to their coops, as her cousin had promised.

The weekly paper had just arrived. Miss Jones had flushed in a startled way as she read "the news." It appeared that the overcoated chicks had been the novelty of the procession. The district had a great many chicken farms. The home display had won over this interest, they had voted for Allen Parsons, and that candidate was elected.

Allen Parsons! How that name awoke painful memories in the heart of the recluse! She had drawn open a drawer in the old-fashioned secretary and had taken thence a sheet of paper, closely written over, and a photograph. The latter was a phototype of the portrait of the successful candidate in the paper. There was a knock at the door. Miss Jones opened it to face—the successful candidate.

"I had to call to thank you for the great support your pets gave me," spoke the stalwart, fine-looking visitor. "Why, Miss Jones—Beulah!"

At sight of the man she had loved, still loved in secret, her estranged fiance, Miss Jones paled, tottered, and Allen had to help her to a chair in the sitting room. As he started to leave her his face fell upon the photograph and the letter. His eyes dilated as he traced a line or two in the latter.

"Beulah," he said, his lips set kindly but determined, "has this letter anything to do with your rejection of my suit two years ago?"

"It has everything to do with it," faltered poor Beulah. "Can you look at it and wonder why? You wrote it."

"Yes, I wrote it, but as a model for a friend who wished to propose to a young lady in another town. How did it come into your possession?"

"Miss Simmons brought it to me—she said she found it."

"Stole it, more likely," asserted Allen. "My old landlady and a mischief-maker! Oh, Beulah! And has this foolish misunderstanding kept us so cruelly apart all of this time?"

John Moore, coming into the house to see his cousin, halted, stared, stood rooted to the spot, and then retreated softly with a great chuckle of satisfaction.

For Beulah was resting confidingly in the strong, protecting arms of Allen Parsons. All had been explained—and the feathery campaigners had done it!

GREEK ROYALTY GETS GRIP ON LEEDS MILLIONS

Coming Marriage of Young Leeds to Princess Solves Finances of Royal Family.

YOUNG GIRL IS TRUMP CARD

Great Fortune Built Up by One-Time Indiana Florist, Then Tin Plate King and Railroad Pyramider to Go to Greek Nobility.

New York.—Royalty, rather battered now by fortunes and misfortunes of European wars, seems in a fair way to get practically every penny of the "tin plate" millions of the American Leeds family. Good old America!

The great fortune built up by the late William B. Leeds, once Indiana florist, humble railroad worker, then manufacturer of tin plate, then railroad pyramider, is going for the benefit of impoverished titles of Greece.

News came from Athens the other day which, it is now disclosed here, means that royalty as represented by King Constantine of Greece and his relatives, have won the lone chance of getting the Leeds fortune.

King Plays Trump Card.

And a seventeen-year-old girl was the "trump card" of the king of Greece in the game of royalty vs. American millions. The girl is Princess Xenia Georgievna, second daughter of Grand Duchess Marie and niece of King Constantine. She is to marry William B. Leeds, Jr., eighteen-year-old son of the late W. B. Leeds and Mrs. Leeds, who is now Princess Anastasia of Greece.

Young Leeds is sole heir to the millions his father left from his exploits in midwestern and Chicago finances. Mrs. Leeds, now Princess Anastasia, of course, has the use of the estate, variously estimated $30,000,000 to $40,000,000, but on her death, under the terms of the Leeds will, the whole estate goes to young Leeds or his heirs.

In other words, Greek royalty didn't stand much chance of keeping the Leeds millions unless they got the son of Mrs. Leeds (Princess Anastasia) into the royal family some way or other.

Princess Anastasia has been ill of late, too. In fact, she has been so ill in Athens that young Leeds recently rushed from New York to France, then by airplane to Athens, to be at the bedside of his mother.

It is interesting to note that Athens press dispatches say that young Leeds proposed to Princess Xenia the day after he arrived in Athens to see his sick mother. He was promptly accepted. And Xenia's acceptance means the battered and unlucky royalty can struggle along a few centuries more with the new riches, unless politics or whims of subjects change things from royalty to democracy.

Building the Fortune.

And now the details of how the Leeds fortune was started and built up are being recalled and uncovered.

Few persons of great wealth had a humbler start in life than William B. Leeds of Richmond, Ind. It is a strange contrast to the life of the king, princesses and others of Greek royalty who now share its benefits. Leeds started in Richmond as a florist, and by his marriage in 1883 to a relative of Harry Miller, then general superintendent of the Pennsylvania railroad, he got work in the railroad field. At length he was division superintendent of the Richmond division of the Pennsylvania and his wife inherited a large sum of money.

Then with Daniel G. Reid as a partner Leeds went into the making of tin plate. The tariff laws were aimed at the development of home industries and a tariff on tin plate permitted the growth of that business down in Indiana.

Moore Brothers as Partners.

Acquiring the aid of W. H. and J. H. Moore of Chicago, Leeds and Reid soon organized the business on a national scale under the name of the American Tin Plate company. In 1898 the United States Steel corporation bought the concern and the profits of the "big four" were estimated to have been close to $40,000,000.

Mr. Leeds and his associates invested their profits in the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railroad. Those were the good old days of watered stocks and the Leeds-Reid-Moore combine soon had the Rock Island a far different institution than in the calm days of R. R. Cable's control. Leeds was made president of the road in 1902, but after two years he quarreled with his partners and was ousted from office. However, he had "cleaned up" and his fortune had grown apace.

Divorced From First Wife.

Meanwhile Leeds had been divorced from the wife of his earlier years—whose money was the nest egg of his huge fortune. She received a flat sum of $1,000,000. They had a son, Rudolph Gaar Leeds of Richmond—who by the way received $1,000,000 by his father's will.

Mrs. Leeds No. 2, the present Princess Anastasia, was Miss Nancy Stewart, daughter of a wealthy [illegible]. She was regarded [illegible] Worthington. It was not long before the Worthington marital bark struck rough waters. Mrs. Worthington secured the divorce.

It was about this time that Mr. Leeds met her and became infatuated with her. It was only three days after the Leeds divorce was granted that Mrs. Worthington became the second Mrs. Leeds. As a wedding present Mr. Leeds gave his new bride jewelry valued at more than a million dollars, a mansion on Fifth avenue estimated to be worth $2,000,000, and an ocean-going steam yacht. It was on one of their visits to Paris that Leeds bought Mrs. Leeds No. 2 a $340,000 pearl necklace.

About that time a son was born to the happy pair—the present W. B. Leeds, Jr. This youth gained the title "poor richest boy" because of the great care his mother and father provided and the fortune spent on guarding his footsteps.

A Royal Bringing-Up.

When this child was two and one-half years old he went with his father and mother to London. And here, in part, is a cabled newspaper dispatch of how the once humble florist and railroad worker provided for his heir by second marriage:

"Not even an heir to royalty could have more elaborate care nor more luxurious service than this little American is now receiving. It is the wonder of the whole hotel (the exclusive Claridge).

"Altogether Baby Leeds has two drawing rooms, two bedrooms in case one bores him, a sitting room, and a bathroom, the whole strictly reserved for him and no one else.

"Two nurses are in constant attendance and a maid, valet, and extra servants are devoted to chasing away dull care."

Death of Mr. Leeds.

It was June 23, 1908, in France, that the "tin plate king" died. The will was filed at Mineola, L. I., September 3, 1908.

Stripped of legal phraseology, here is the paragraph that gives to royalty of Greece (by marriage) the bulk of the "tin plate" millions:

"If the son, William B. Leeds, Jr., or issue of his shall survive the widow (Mrs. Leeds No. 2, now Princess Anastasia) three-fourths of the residuary estate is to be set aside for William B. Leeds, Jr., or his issue."

In other words, if Princess Anastasia dies, her husband, Prince Christopher, brother of King Constantine, gets about $10,000,000, and young Leeds about $30,000,000. Then when young Leeds dies, his royal widow or their children, if any, will get the $30,000,000 or more of good American money.

After the death of Mr. Leeds and in the years before his widow was captured by the Greeks, she broke into European society right and left—real royalty's private grounds—because of the Leeds' millions at her command. Many a dented title sought her hand in marriage. Her marriage to Prince Christopher occurred at Geneva on January 31, 1920, and made her a cousin of most of the royalty of Europe and gave her such exalted rank as had not been held by an American woman in many years. That's how she got the title "the Dollar Princess."

Bringing Up Golden Child.

While Mrs. Leeds was carrying on her conquest of royalty at their home towns, young Leeds was being kept under the care of a small crew of servants, instructors, and others afforded only by mean millions. Here is an account of how the youth "grew up":

"Young Leeds had every imaginable safeguard placed about him to prevent his being kidnaped and to shield him from other harm. His mother installed him in her former home in Montclair, N. J. When he stepped from the carriage or automobile each morning at the Montclair academy, he seemed to breathe freely. For most of the time he attended school there his mother was in Europe and he lived 'alone' with the servants to minister to his wants and detectives to protect him—but all to keep him from enjoying the pleasures of other boys of his age."

His mother, while abroad, got daily cabled reports on his health. Then, later, she took him to England to complete his education, giving as the excuse that "he might not become dissipated like so many rich American boys."

Recently in America.

Young Leeds, around whom the Leeds millions really center, was in this country only a few weeks ago. He arrived in Los Angeles late in February on his return from an adventurous trip into the wilds of the Sumatra jungles, where he hunted tigers. He had been bitten in the arm by a poisonous insect. He went to a sanitarium in Shanghai, but did not recover wholly from the infection and hurried to this country to undergo an operation in New York.

While he was crossing the continent his mother, believed to be dangerously ill, was preparing for an operation in Athens for an intestinal trouble. He went to the Ritz-Carlton, intending to arrange for his own surgical treatment, but news of his mother's condition led him to abandon that project and sail for Europe.

Love Sickness.

Erasistratus gives an account of the consequences of masked or hidden love. These comprised languishing eyes, with anomalies of the voice and complexion, ears, etc. When a patient presented these symptoms, especially if he or she were a youth, the medical man should suspect a secret love passion. The source of the latter might be found by the reaction which took place on the entrance into the room of the object of the passion. This consisted of a change of color, trembling, palpitating and sweating. The astute physician by placing his hand over the subject's heart could feel its agitation when the object of love entered the room. In later years the pulse was deemed a sufficient guide for the medical man, the other symptoms having been regarded as largely secondary to the disturbance of the heart.

Blind Ox Dies in Pining for Gander

Greensboro, Ala.—The blind ox, famous as the protege and ward of a stately gander on the J. A. Holcroft plantation, ten miles west of this city, is dead, and those on the Holcroft farm believe his death was due directly to separation from the gander.

Since last fall, when the ox lost its sight, the gander had acted as personal guardian of its huge, helpless friend. They were in constant association—the gander always present to fight away other cattle, on the spot when the ox needed a drink at the nearby pasture creek, and alert to every chance to give service.

Recently it became necessary to transfer the ox to another field. The gander was unable to follow. It was unused to the new environs and a separation resulted. It was too much for the ox. He pined the first afternoon and drooped and gloomed the following day and finally lay down and died. And thus ended one of the strangest friendships on record.

The St. Hilaire
School Review

The Senior class entertained the High School and upper grades during assembly last Friday. The progam was "out-of-the-ordinary" and was enjoyed to the fullest extent by all.

A slide, which was purchased with funds derived from the play, "The Birds' Xmas Carol," arrived the first of last week It has proven to be a source of geat enjoyment, especially for the little people.

The Domestic Science class under the supervision of Miss Johnson, served a danity luncheon to the school faculty Tuesday afternoon of last week. It was a great success and the girls and their instructor were congratulated on their ability as "cooks."

The Field Meet

Perhaps no other coming event has created so much enthusiasm and caused so much planning among the pupils of the school and St. Hilaire in general, as the Field Meet which is to be held at Middle River, May 21. This is the day when the St. Hilaire school will compete with such schools as Middle River, Greenbush, Holt, Badger, Lancaster and others, in contests of various sorts. There will be baseball games for the championship; also girls' and boys' tennis games for the championship. There will be a mile run, 50 yard dash, running high jump, standing high jump, baseball and basketball throw for distance, and Declamatory contests. St. Hilaire school is going into the contests with all its might, and is going to capture the lion's share of the pennants.

Numerous local people have signified their intentions of accompanying the school to Middle River. We want everyone who can possibly do so, to come and help cheer and encourage the boys and girls who are going into the contets. If you intend to go up in your auto, list your name with Supt. S. L. Johnson as early as possible.

The Senior Class of 1921

Realizing that there is but a short time remaining before the Seniors graduate from St. Hilaire High, it is fitting to say a few words regarding their loyalty and value to our high school. These young people, who are so soon to realize the culmination of all their hopes and dreams of past years, have gained the respect and admiration of every high school student. because they have always shown themselves to be loyal to their school and faithful in their studies. In every thing undertaken by our school, the Seniors have played an imporant part, and we realize that their departure from our school will cause a distinct loss. But, whatever may be their future, they have the best wishes of all for success, happiness and prosperity.

Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Ford Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in price at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached an the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made, in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

GOERGEN STORE CHANGES HANDS

Store Closed For Inventory. New Firm Takes Charge This Week.

The general mercantile business conducted here by Henry Goergen was sold this week to William Crown and Richard Larson, both of whom were raised in this community and are well known thruout the territory. The store has been closed since Tuesday to enable those in charge to take inventory. Mr. Goergen, who has been in the harness every day since he first opened for business in this village, has decided to take a well earned rest and will spend the summer closing up minor affairs relating to the business, after which he proposes to take life easy. He retains his residence property and will make this his permanent home. Both members of the new firm are well and favorably known and have the best wishes of the community for a success in their new venture. They are now rearranging the stock and will have everything in tip top shape when they open for business.

Field Meet Saturday

A field meet will be held at Middle River next Saturday at which teams from ten different high schools including St. Hilaire and all towns above Thief River Falls, will compete. A fine program of sports has been arranged. St. Hilaire will be represented by the high school ball team, tennis team, running teams, and will also enter in the oratorical and declamatory contests. Cars will leave here at 7:30 Saturday morning for the run to Middle River. Anyone who intends to go up with a car and has room to spare, will confer a favor by notifying S. L. Johnson. Many cars are already listed but more would be desirable. Take a day off and help root for our high school.

April Fool Jokes.

According to tradition the custom arose from the fact that Noah sent out the dove on the first of the month, which corresponded to our April, before the water had abated. To perpetuate the memory of the great deliverance of Noah and his family, it was customary on this anniversary to punish persons who had forgotten the remarkable circumstance connected with the date by sending them on some foolish errand, similar to that on which the patriarch sent the luckless dove from the windows of the ark.

District Wins Suit

Contractor L. D. McAdams of Thief River Falls will be compelled to pay the local school district about $2100.00 for failure to complete his contract for building the new school, according to a decision handed down by Judge Grindeland recently.

Mr. McAdams was the successful bidder when the contract was let, two years ago. After dallying around for several months he decided he had taken the job at a losing figure and tried to get back his certified check deposited as evidence of good faith. Failing in this, he had the Farmers and Merchants State Bank of Thief River Falls refuse payment on the check, alleging irregularities on part of the board which he claimed invalidated the contract and released him from responsibility. The suit brought was to decide this issue, and it was decided in favor of the distict. A twenty day stay was granted in which to file an appeal by the defendant if he should so desire. Even if the district recovers under the verdict as stated, it will be reinbursed only to the extent of 20 per cent of the loss sustained by failure of the contractor to build the school.

Murderous Assault

Robert Manley of Red Lake Falls, who is well known to many local people, was the star actor in murderous role last Saturday night when he attempted to kill his wife. Owing to differences and alleged non-support, Mrs. Manley who was a widow with minor children when she married Manley about a year ago, was living apart from her husband. The later, bent on squaring accounts, went to her home, forced open the door and attacked the woman with a knife. inflicting deep wounds in her arms and head. She managed to break away and ran to a neighbor for help. The would-be murderer escaped from the scene but was captured Tuesday night and lodged in jail. Mrs. Manley is reported to be recovering though still weak from the loss of blood.

Special Election

As will be noticed by published notice in this issue, a special election has been called in the local school distict to be held June 1st, to vote on the matter of issuing $20,000.00 additional bonds to take up outstanding warrants and floating indebtedness. When the new school was built, the total amount of bonds floated for that purpose was $55,000.00 Owing to unforseen conditions arising, the actual cost of the building was approximately $65,000.00, or ten thousand more than was raised. New equipment such as seats, bus, laboratory and domestic science equipment, books, etc., took several thousand more. New walks will have to be built this summer which will necessitate additional expenditure. In order to finance the school thus far, the board has been compelled to issue warrants which draw from 8 to 10 per cent interest. At the last named figure, which most of the warrants are bearing, the distict is now paying $2000.00 a year interest on floating indebtedness. By issuing bonds which bear only 7 percent the district will pay $1,400.00 In other words, the school district will save $600 00 a year or at at the rate of $50.00 a month by voting bonds Taxpayers who are interested in getting a lower tax rate, should get solidly behind the issue and vote for bonds.

Accidentally Shot

Martin Loberg is getting around with aid of crutches this week as result of a shooting accident last Sunday. While at the Albert Kolp place. Elmer Kolp took a loaded pistol from his pocket to show to Martin. In some unaccountable manner the gun was discharged, the bullet passing thru the latter's thigh, causing a painful flesh wound. The bone was not touched, and precautions were taken to prevent complications setting in, so it is unlikely the wound will cause any more than temporary inconvenience.

HOME TALENT PLAY WAS FINE

Best Play Ever Presented Here By Home Talent. Will Show Again.

The home talent play, "Her Gloves", presented Friday night for the benefit of the Athletic Club, was easily the best play ever given here by local talent. All members of the cast had their parts down to perfection and everything went off with professionl precision. Time and space forbid exhaustive mention of the numerous good points noted in different members of the cast, but let it suffice to say none of the characters could have been improved upon. Musical numbers rendered between acts were excellent, and were greatly enjoyed. The hall proved too small to accommodate all who desired admittance and many were turned away. By request of a large number of the latter as well as many who attended Friday night, the play will be presented here again next Wednesday night. The troupe went over to Plummer Saturday evening and played there to a small but appreciative audience. It will be presented at Red Lake Falls Friday night. The farce is full of side splitting situations and laughable incidents. Those who failed to get in Friday should make special efforts to be on hand early Wednesday as a full house is expected then also.

Community Club

Next regular meeting of the Community Club will be held at the school house Friday evening, May 27. A. D. Wilson, connected with the Extension Division of the University of Minnesota, will be present and deliver an address. Mr. Wilson is especialy interested in club work and will have a message that will be worth coming miles to hear. The best program since the club was organized is scheduled for the 27th and a record breaking attendance is expected.

Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Allen left yesterday morning for Eagle Bend, Minnesota, where they will visit relatives.

Unlucky Doctor.

The Chinese have a strong sense of humor. This joke, told by a writer in the "Open Court," will bring a smile to almost any face: There was a doctor who understood so little of his profession that every now and then he killed one of his patients. He had a son and a daughter. One day he had sent the son of a family to the other world, and since the family was much dissatisfied he gave them his own son in compensation. Subsequently he had the misfortune to dispatch the daughter of another couple and was obliged to give them his own daughter to make good the loss. He was now alone with his wife. They were feeling lonely and miserable one evening, when again some one knocked at the door and asked for the doctor. He went out himself and inquired of the man who it was that needed him. The man said that it was his wife.

The poor doctor went back into his room and, shedding tears, said to his wife: "I see it coming. There must be somebody who has cast an eye on you."

Music and Morals.

Take the art of music. Great music even merely good music which has melody and harmony in it, flows around us like a stream of pure, clear water, or, like the billows of a great sea, it refreshes and it strengthens; but sensual music, lascivious music, mean music, if it can be called music at all, irritates, demoralizes and vulgarizes those who listen to it. Jazz, for example, I think, was invented by imps for the torment of imbeciles. True, it does not contain any distinct immoral teaching, because music is not a didactic art, but jazz does contain a real immoral influence, because it confuses, bewilders, benumbs and befuddles the mind through the ears. It is, in effect, the dope or knockout drop in the art of music.—Dr. Henry Van Dyke.

The Cord of Death.

An extraordinary method is employed for hanging criminals in the San Quentin penitentiary, California. No photographs have ever been taken of the death chamber, but this is what takes place. Three guards hide behind a screen near the gallows. They are employed to cut the cord which releases the trap door for the execution. In order that none of the men will know who cut the fatal strand, three cords are stretched across a table. All of these are cut at the same time, so that there is no way of knowing which one actually released the trap.

Certain Advantages of Partial Payment Investing

We do not know of any other partial payment plan for investing that equals ours in convenience, fairness and financial return to the investor.

An investor on our plan undertakes to purchase a definite number of shares of Northern States Power Preferred Stock at the rate of $5.00 (or more) per share per month. He obtains the stock for the same price as the cash investor. He makes a first payment and receives an ownership certificate upon which his subsequent payments are endorsed.

During the payment period each deposit as made earns interest for the investor at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the day it is paid in. When the payments are completed the ownership is exchanged for a permanent Preferred Stock certificate, paying a return (at the present price of the stock) of 8.4 per cent a year divided into four dividend checks, received every 90 days.

If an investor cannot or decides not to complete his payments, he has the privilege of withdrawing his funds in which case he receives them back in full with 3 per cent interest added for the time the Company has had use of his money. There is no forfeiture or loss.

The steady accumulation of wealth by means of this method will beat the Get Rich Quick schemes 999 times out of 1000.

An 8.4 per cent investment backed by an 11 years dividend record.

LIVE STOCK FACTS

PARASITES CAUSE BIG LOSS

Injury From Insects Is Greatest Among Lambs and Young Sheep—Ways to Prevent Diseases.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Sheep probably suffer more than any other kind of live stock from parasites. They are practically immune to tuberculosis, which is one of the serious ailments of cattle and swine, and among sheep there is nothing comparable to the devastating outbreaks of cholera among swine. Sheep have comparatively few bacterial diseases. Nevertheless, there is a steady loss of sheep in all parts of the country and this loss is mostly due to parasites.

It is the sheep owners' business to prevent disease rather than to attempt to cure it after it has made its appearance. While there are special treatments for the various diseases which makes it advisable to call a competent veterinarian, there are a number of ways to prevent diseases caused by parasites. Among these pasture rotation, use of forage crops, feeding from racks or board floors, draining or filling swamps, and preventing wandering dogs from getting into the flock. Permanent pastures perpetuate parasites, it is stated. The eggs of internal parasites pass from the animals in the manure and thus the pastures become infested. The proper disposal of the manure will aid in preventing this.

Damage from parasites is greatest, as a rule, among lambs and young sheep. Hence, it is important to pay special attention to the care and handling of lambs and yearlings. Prompt action to ascertain the cause when sheep become unthrifty will often prevent serious loss.

Parasites of sheep are divided into two general groups, external and internal. Among the former, lice, sheep ticks, and scab mites are the most common. One application of sodium flouride in the form of a powder rubbed into the skin will kill biting lice, but not sucking lice. Both kinds of lice, sheep ticks, and scab mites are destroyed by dipping the sheep. For lice and sheep ticks a number of dips are recommended in the bulletin, including coal tar creosote, cresol, and nicotin, or nicotin and sulphur. For scab mites the official dips are lime-sulphur and nicotin-sulphur dips. Arsenical dips are not well suited to sheep dipping. All places which have been occupied by lousy sheep should be regarded as dangerous from this standpoint for a period of three weeks; if occupied by ticky sheep, as dangerous for two months; if occupied by scabby sheep, as dangerous for a month or two in the case of pastures, and a year or more in the case of buildings. Quarantine measures are essential in eradicating scab.

Where Pasture Is Abundant Sheep Need No Other Feed.

The most common internal parasites of sheep include tapeworms, flukes, roundworms, and a few other forms such as maggots causing grub in the head, the tongue-worm and the one-celled protozoa. One of the most common of these is the grub, infestation with which can be largely prevented by smearing the nose of the sheep with a preparation made of equal parts of tar and grease, or tar and fish oil. Other important internal parasites discussed in the bulletin are tapeworms, the gid parasites, hydatid, liver flukes, stomach worms, nodular worms, hookworms, and lungworms. Of these, certain tapeworms are fairly common over the entire United States; one tapeworm occurs only in the West; gid is most prevalent in Montana; liver flukes are most common in the Gulf states and the Pacific Coast states; stomach worms and lungworms take a heavy toll in sheep in almost every state in the Union, and nodular worms and hookworms are common in the South and East.

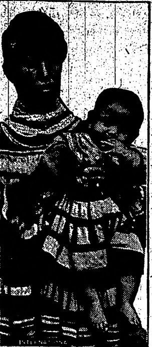
SEMINOLES UNIQUE TRIBE



In the heart of the Florida everglades, shunning civilization and retaining traditional customs centuries old, live the remnants of the once mighty nation of Seminole Indians.

In many respects their mode of living is still the same as it was before the time of Columbus. The present members of the once famous nation are descendants of that invincible tribe led by the warrior chieftain Osceola. The Seminoles are kind to their families, devoted to their children, pure in their morals and honest among themselves and with the whites. The present members of the tribe do most of their trading in Miami and vicinity, disposing of furs, trinkets and other products. It has often been said that the Seminole lives the ideal simple life. In the everglade villages efficiency, competition, etc., are unknown quantities. In 1917 the state of Florida granted the Indians 1,000,000 acres as reservation lands.

The photograph shows a Seminole mother and child. Note the unique headdress and the great amount of beads.

Temperamental Bird.

The raven is a bird among birds, self-reliant and formidable. Naturalists, says a writer in the New York Sun, call him the most wary, the most amusing, the cleverest of birds. He is also described as grave, dignified and sedate. The bill of the raven is a formidable weapon, strong, stout, sharp at the edges and curved toward the tip. It is his one weapon of offense, but it answers the purpose of two or three. Like the dirk of the old-time plainsman, it is available as a dagger or as a carving knife; and it can also be used as a pair of pinchers. With one blow it can kill a rat, and the raven can easily drive it through the spines of a hedgehog. If it is true that the raven will never attack a man, probably it is not so much from lack of courage as from the bird's keen intellectual perception of what is unwise.

Wider Field Suggested.

"My dear," said Mr. Peckton, mildly, "you ought not to waste all your talents as a debater on me." "Why not?" asked Mrs. Pecton. "It's so easy for you to win the little—er—arguments we have here at home that I'm afraid if you ever entered politics and had to cope with some experienced debaters overconfidence might cause you to get the worst of it."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

JUSTICE SWIFT IN NEW JERSEY

Trials of Bandits and Major Criminals Rushed on the Day of Arrest.

IS FOUNDED ON CALVANISM.

Wheels of Court Move Quickly—Famed Not Only for Accuracy and Relentlessness, but for Fairness and Efficiency.

Trenton, N. J.—Interesting light has been thrown on the operation and speed "of Jersey justice," as a result of recent convictions for murder and other crimes. While misdemeanors and felonies have increased in New Jersey, as elsewhere in the country in the last year or so, state records show that there have been few disagreements of juries, and prison sentences have been extended to maximum limits in order to discourage violations of the law.

One feature of New Jersey law that few, if any, of the other states have and which is said to have been a prime factor in giving the state its traditional reputation for lightninglike court procedure, is a provision that a jury in a first degree murder trial may designate life imprisonment instead of the death penalty for the convicted person. This has resulted in many quick convictions for life imprisonment where, otherwise, there might have been jury disagreements.

Quick Bandit Trials.

Cases like that of the Union county bandits, Charles and John Krebs and Martin Shannon, who were sentenced to serve from 56 to 75 years each, and who were tried, convicted and were beginning to serve their sentences within 148 hours of their capture, are occurring daily in New Jersey, the present so-called "crime wave" apparently furnishing an excellent test for the efficiency of its courts.

"Jersey justice," famed from Maine to Florida, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and even overseas, not only because of its speed, its accuracy and its relentlessness, but also because of its fairness and efficiency, was not established overnight. It is scarcely a tangible thing. It may be best described as "a state of mind," the people demanding that their law officers be efficient above everything else. Thus prosecutors, grand juries, judges, petit juries and all other branches of the administration of justice, which lead the criminal to prison and the murderer to the death chair, are just so many wheels and gears and belts in an almost perfectly working "machine" whose motive power is the people.

Tradition has had much to do with making "Jersey justice." Beginning with the early days of the settlement of the state, when many crimes were punishable by death, the Calvinists brought into east Jersey distinctive views of religious and civil matters which probably were the roots of "Jersey justice."

New Jersey differs in no great respect from other states as to the general legal procedure for the punishment of crime. Lynchings and crime against accused persons, however, are rare. Officers of the law, from the highest judges down, are well paid, and every effort is made to keep politics out of the courts. At present there are more than three-score life prisoners in the state prison here and eight out of every ten convicts are in for long terms.

Safeguards for Innocent.

While "Jersey justice" is swift, the innocent are safeguarded through a system of appeals, reprieves and stays, the latter sometimes operating to save convicted persons from the death chair. The case of Frank P. James and Raymond W. Schuck, convicted of killing David S. Paul, a Camden bank messenger, is an illustration. After their arrest the trials of the murderers were expedited and the same day they were sentenced they were in the deathhouse here "candidates" for the chair.

In July, 1004, three young negroes, Aaron Timbers, William Austin and Jonas Simms, entered the home of a farmer named Biddle, near Burlington, bound Mrs. Biddle and attacked her. Within a few days all three were captured, tried, convicted and had begun sentences of 49 years each in state prison.

"Bill" Framer, a Camden holdup man, who terrorized women, was recently captured and tried and convicted the next day. The evening of that day he was on his way to prison to begin a long term.

Shot Better Than He Spelled.

Harrodsburg, Ky.—One of the most interesting relics in the state is Daniel Boone's old rifle and shot pouch, which are now preserved in the Kentucky Historical society. Both gun and pouch are in a fine state of preservation. On the stock of the rifle are carved the words, "D. Boone, his Fren," together with images of deer and other animals.

Gun Trap Set for Thieves Killed Boy.

Orrstown, Pa.—While playing hide-and-seek with school companions, Abram M. Flora, ten-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Flora, stepped on a string attached to the trigger of a shotgun, set as a trap for grain thieves in the barn of Norman Hock and was killed.

Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Ford Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in priee at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached an the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

COMMENCEMENT STARTS MAY 29

Prominent Educator Secured To Deliver Address On June Third.

The Baccalaureate service on Sunday, May 29th, will usher in commencement week for the graduating class of the local school this year. The sermon is to be delivered by Rev. C M, Grimsrud at the Norwegian Lutheran church. On Thursday evening the graduates of both high school and eighth grade are to give their class day exercises at the high school auditorium. Friday, June third is the day set for commencement exercises for both classes. These, also, will be held at the high school Supt. G. H. Sandberg of Crookston has been secured as the chief speaker of the evening, and he will have a message well worth hearing. Mr. Sandberg's address, together with the valedictory address by Josephine Hallemeck, the salutatory address by Tessie King, and special by the high school chorus, will constitute the program for commencement night. The public is not only invited to attend these affairs but is urged to do so. Commencement week should be considered of interest not only to graduates and their families, but to the entire community.

A young son of Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Westerlund was very ill Tuesday but is reported much better now.

Killed By Auto

"Bill" Fellman was killed Monday morning when he was run down by a car while crossing the street in front of Nelson's store. He evidently did not hear or see the car, and it passed over him with both wheels, breaking his spine and causing other injuries which caused death in a few minutes. Bill was only a dog, but he was a friendly one, and he will be missed.

In Appreciation

Having sold my mercantile business in St. Hilaire, I wish to express my appreciation and thanks to all former customerrs for their liberal patronage and good will during the past eighteen years. The new proprietors, Crown and Larson will carry on the business at the old stand, and I hope you will favor them with the same liberal patronage I have enjoyed from you in the past.

Respectfully yours
Henry Goergen.

Present Play Again

The farce "Her Gloves" was presented here again last evening to a packed house. Since first appearance here when the hall was too small to accommodate all who wished to see it, it has been presented to appeciative audiences at both Red Lake Falls and Plummer. All who have seen the play are unanamous in declaring it the best "gloom chaser" ever put on in these parts by a home talent company.

Lose To Thief River

The local ball team lost by a score of 6 to 0 in their game with Thief River last Sunday. Errors in two innings let in the scores mentioned. Thief River was held scoreless in the other seven innings which is good record for the local team considering this was their first game this season and that they were short two of their heaviest stick artists.

Celebrate Anniversary

Fifth anniversary of orgnization of Iris Rebekah Lodge was fittingly observed by a social session at the lodge rooms Tuesday evening.

A very pleasant evening was spent at various forms of amusement after which the ladies served a dainty luncheon.

The lodge has made fine progress since it was organized five years ago, and now has a large and growing membership.

This Old Earth.

Abbe Theodore Moreaux, director of the observatory of Bourges, in an article in La Revue de Ciel, declares the world to be five hundred million years old, instead of fifty million, the opinion of other astronomers. Abbe Moreaux also thinks that man existed for tens of thousands of years instead of six thousand based on figures in the Bible. He says the belief of German scientists that human beings have existed for four hundred thousand years has no basis in fact. The Bible's six thousand years are an invention of the translators and copyists. Life, Abbe Moreaux says, has existed on the earth for at least two hundred and forty to two hundred and sixty million years, although it has not been human life. He says the moon was not once part of the earth, but was a sun that once aided in warming the earth.

"You admit, then, that you voted a man who had been dead for ten years?" "Yes," said the practical politician, "but he was an old friend of mine, and I knew that we were carrying out his wishes."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Community Club

Regular meeting of the Community Club will be held Friday nigth this week. A. D. Wilson of the University of Minnesota will be present and will have an interesting address to deliver. Next Monday, being Memorial Day, is a legal holiday and will be more generally observed thruout the country than has been the custom in the past. Louis Philippe and Wife.

Louis Philippe (1773-1850) was the eldest son of Duke Louis of Orleans. He supported the French revolution, but was suspected of aiming at the crown and was compelled to leave France in 1793. He did not return until after the fall of Napoleon in 1815, having spent the intervening time in Austria, America and Great Britain. After the revolution of 1830 and the abdication of Charles X. he was elected "king of the French by the grace of God and the will of the people." He held this office until 1848, when another revolution occurred, and he retired to England, where he and his wife—arriving as "Mr. and Mrs. Smith"—settled in Claremont, placed at their disposal by Queen Victoria, under the incognito of Count and Countess of Neuilly. Louis Philippe died at Claremont August 26, 1850.

Roman Baths Overpraised.

The baths of ancient Rome so wonderfully pictured by painters and story tellers, do not compare favorably with the modern bath. Judged by standards prevailing before the coming of Christ these baths were wonderful, but measured by standards of today the glories of Rome, marks of the highest degree of civilization in the ancient world, would be declared unsanitary and likely be condemned as menaces to the health of users.

Certain Advantages of Partial Payment Investing

We do not know of any other partial payment plan for investing that equals ours in convenience, fairness and financial return to the investor.

An investor on our plan undertakes to purchase a definite number of shares of Northern States Power Preferred Stock at the rate of $5.00 (or more) per share per month. He obtains the stock for the same price as the cash investor. He makes a first payment and receives an ownership certificate upon which his subsequent payments are endorsed.

During the payment period each deposit as made earns interest for the investor at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the day it is paid in. When the payments are completed the ownership is exchanged for a permanent Preferred Stock certificate, paying a return (at the present price of the stock) of 8.4 per cent a year divided into four divideud checks, received every 90 days.

If an investor cannot or decides not to complete his payments, he has the privilege of withdrawing his funds in which case he receives them back in full with 3 per cent interest added for the time the Company has had use of his money. There is no forfeiture or loss.

The steady accumulation of wealth by means of this method will beat the Get Rich Quick schemes 999 times out of 1000.

An 8.4 per cent investment backed by an 11 years dividend record.

When Failure Turned Into Success

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD.

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

To watch Preston frisking about the diamond, garbed fantastically in the azure doublet and hose, feathered hat and alpenstock of a Tyrolese mountaineer, who would never deduce the fact that he was revisiting, after a ten-years' absence, the scene of his greatest defeat. Yet such was the case, and Preston, despite the outward and visible signs of a spirit in accord with the gambols of his class, was experiencing an inward pang at every reminder of a time long past but still very dear.

For Preston's downfall had not been scholastic. On the contrary, he was an honor man and a member of one of those two fraternities composed of prodigies in letters or science. No, Preston had graduated brilliantly. The acid which had eaten into his soul had been contained in the parting words of Elizabeth Rogers, the daughter of his favorite professor, whom he had masterfully appropriated, as far as parental authority would permit, from the evening of the president's reception to the freshmen to the final midnight frolic of his senior class day.

"No, Preston," she had said with a firm shake of her head. "You have it in you to be everything that I could desire, but I do not think you have yet realized your opportunities. I have tried to show you time and again that I did not care for you as I should, but the very fact that you would not understand is an illustration of what I mean. You can't successfully conceive of things going any way but your way. You won't be successful until you have learned to stand up under defeat."

Preston had been cruelly hurt at first, then blindly angry. Immediately after commencement he had departed with his diploma, highest recommendations from his professors and the memory of the first criticism he had ever received rankling in his heart. And accompanying it all was a determination to make his name so well known that it would, perforce, be brought to her attention and prove a refutation of her words, a boyish but natural desire.

His name, however, had not become well known. Honor men in the classroom do not always keep at the top in the exacting field of business. Frequently he found the practical experience of other men gained while he was at college preferred to his theoretical knowledge acquired during these four years.

Out of Sheer Curiosity, Walked Nearer.

And it was when he came to realize for the first time that all his life he would occupy mediocre positions commanding mediocre salaries that he bowed to the truth in Elizabeth Rogers' words. So confident had he been of success that he had expected it to be his for the asking, and had altogether neglected the humble apprenticeship success demands of her votaries.

Last night at his reunion supper Preston had heard old classmates acclaimed as a credit to their class, their college. Such a one was Tom Pender, never brilliant, but now manager of a mighty corporation. Such a one, also, was Jimmy Blake, who had always seemed to Preston unconscionably dull, but now an important factor in opening an Alaskan railroad.

Of these things Preston was thinking as he marched in traditional fashion before the bleachers. He was thinking also of the last game he had watched played on the field. By his side had sat Elizabeth, her eyes glorious above his roses, her whole face alight with young enthusiasm.

At the thought Preston turned to the puffing Tyrolean at his side. "What became of Professor Rogers' daughter, I wonder?" he asked, striving to make the question carefully casual.

His companion returned glibly. "Why, sure, she married Sprackling, class ahead. We passed her a minute or so ago back in prexy's stand."

Preston would not have believed that [illegible] searched for her. Yes, there was Professor Rogers, a bit thinner and grayer, and by his side a strikingly gowned woman, betraying a matronly plumpness, but beneath whose drooping hat Preston fancied, even at that distance away, he could detect a likeness to the gay little Elizabeth of years ago.

"Elizabeth's married and me—a failure—life's a funny thing," said Preston to himself and, sitting cross-legged on the ground in front of the alumni stand, meditated upon the humor of existence throughout the game which followed. Even the old-time snake dance succeeding the victory failed to rouse him.

Elizabeth married! Somehow or other, that possibility had never really occurred to him. Always, in the back of his mind, had been the resolution when he found success to take it back and lay it at her feet. Now that he knew success would never come, it was odd that he was so cut up to hear she would not have been there to receive it.

Class night—and the campus a veritable fairyland with gleaming multicolored lanterns festooned among the trees. Soft, seductive strains floating from chapter houses and mingling with the delicate laughter of women and the deeper voices of their companions. Poignantly reminded of other years, Preston wandered about alone, stopping occasionally to greet a friend or to relight his cigar.

On that greensward beneath the chapter house windows he had danced with Elizabeth. He recalled how light she was in his arms. He had sat beneath that tree and told her he loved her, and had stopped her protest by placing masterfully her own soft hand against her mouth. But heavens! reminiscing about one's love when that love is married is as savorless as a cigar long gone out.

Then he noticed that some one was sitting alone beneath that very tree, and that it was a woman. Unattended women on class night are very rare and Preston, out of sheer curiosity, walked nearer. As he did so an odd premonition stirred his heart; the figure was so strikingly like, not the woman of the afternoon beside Professor Rogers, but like the Elizabeth of long ago.

At his approach the figure half rose, then sank down again, startled. "Why, Mr. Preston—John Preston!" she held out a hand. "Have you forgotten Betty Rogers?"

"But you're married!" said Preston, quite absurdly, and then felt strangely thrilled as she shook her head.

"My sister is married, not I." And Preston realized that he had forgotten she had ever had a sister.

A beautiful night, soft music, two old acquaintances, in a way two old lovers—what more natural than that they should sit together as the hours drifted by and talk of old times and what the years had brought to each? And as the clock from the memorial tower pealed midnight Preston touched her hand.

"If I had made a success of life I would have come for you, Betty; you must believe that," he whispered. "I can't offer you my failure!"

Elizabeth shook her head, smiling. "If you had come successful, I would never have taken you. As it is—"

"Elizabeth!" Their eyes met and at what he saw shining there Preston knew for the first time the exhilaration of the wine of success.

EVOLVED IN BRAIN OF POET?

World Has Long Wondered Where Bryant Found the Since Celebrated Name of Oregon.

When the poet Bryant, in "Thanatopsis," employed the word "Oregon" as applying to the great western empire washed by the Pacific and drained by the Columbia river, he did a thing that has kept the world busy ever since in attempting to discover where he found the word. The enigma is still unsolved. That was the first time, so far as history knows, that the word Oregon was used. The origin of the word California is enveloped in a no less dense cloud. Although Cortez, one-time captain general of the peninsula, called the territory Santa Cruz, a late discovery indicates that he may have been responsible for the name. It was October 14, 1524, that he either heard or invented a story to the effect that "lying ten days' journey from Colina" was "an island of women only, abounding in pearls and gold." Forthwith he turned to the calendar of saints to choose a name for the fabulous island. He found under that date the saints Calixto and Fortunata. While selecting neither of these names, Cortez evidently combined them, using the first parts of each and adding the suffix "nia"—Cali-for-nia. In the same way he selected a name for the queen of the fabled isle. Her name is Calafia.

Sand Not Proof of Sea.

Because of the great accumulation of sand in the desert, there is a popular idea that it must have been at one time the site of the sea, but this is not the case.

It is certain, high authorities contend, that the sands of all the great deserts have been formed on the spot by the disintegration of the solid rocks on which they rest. Desert sands correspond in all respects so far as their mode of origin is concerned to the dust and sand that accumulates on our high roads in the summer.

All deserts are situated where the winds from the ocean, before reaching them, are exhausted of their [illegible]

500 IDLE SHIPS IN JAMES RIVER

Problem of Disposal Probably Will Reach Congress Early in the Session.

HAVE VALUABLE MACHINERY

Marine Men Say Engines Could Be Taken Out and Installed in Other Vessels—Skeleton Crews Have Little to Do.

Norfolk, Va.—What to do with about 500 wooden and steel ships lying idle in James river is a question that will probably reach the floor of congress within a short time.

The wooden ships are mostly anchored in the vicinity of Claremont. There are as many as six moored together, side by side, so close that it is possible to step from the deck of one ship to another without any danger of falling overboard. Skeleton crews are employed and the only work they are required to do is to keep the decks and fixtures clean and stand watches. They are called upon sometimes to daub a little paint on the sides of the ships, but five hours out of the day they have nothing to do but play checkers, cards or indulge in any other pastime they see fit.

There is valuable machinery in the ships that marine men say could be taken out and put to use in other vessels. Most of the ships are equipped with the best of engines, and the government, it is claimed, could realize considerable money out of their sale. Shipbuilders say the engines could be installed in barges that could be used to transport freight between Baltimore and Philadelphia and Norfolk via the inland waterway, or in freight carriers operating between New York, Providence, Boston and Norfolk.

Constructive Plan Offered.

One shipbuilder makes this suggestion:

"Strip the machinery from the wooden ships, then organize a corporation, or several corporations to build steel hulls or barges on a comparatively inexpensive plan and install the engines in them. These barges would be invaluable for coastwise trade or even for trade with Cuba and could be operated at a cost much less than the present steamships.

"Of course it will take money to put such a plan in operation, but it does not require a large financial outlay. The steel hulls can be built in any one of a half dozen shipyards on Hampton Roads and with the prospective reduction in the cost of labor and the decrease in the cost of material, competition would be keen for the building of these craft."

There is little chance of any of the wooden ships ever being of any material service again, because only a few of them would be worth the expense of repairing of sea trade. A good many of the ships are already beginning to show decay and it would not be surprising if several of them were abandoned altogether within a year or so. It is the opinion of marine men that when the government begins to discard the wooden ships completely they will be blown up with dynamite, as if they were a menace to navigation.

The people of Claremont are divided on the benefit the town has derived by the location of the fleet near that town. The anchorage occupied by the ships is referred to as the "boneyard."

"Many go in but none come out" is the way Robert Minter, a veteran river man who has resided near Claremont since a few days after the Civil war, refers to the "boneyard."

Last Days of the Monitors.

Minter's opinion is shared by others, because all the old inhabitants of Claremont, City Point and other James river landings remember the fate of seven monitors that the government decided to discard 25 years ago. Among these monitors were the Catskill, Mahopac, Ajax and Caconicus. In their day they were looked upon with the same respect as the present day dreadnaught. They were the backbone of the American navy.

There came a day, however, when the government found it a burden to keep these ships in active service, so they were sent up to the James river. For seven years they lay at anchor off City Point. Then they were sent further up the James river to a point about five miles below Richmond. There they almost rotted to pieces, and when they began to leak the government ordered them to Norfolk to be thrown on the junk pile.

The newest place for "laying up" idle ships is the York river. This historic stream, like the James, empties into Hampton Roads, and during the last six weeks at least 100 vessels that came into Hampton Roads did not go out again. Instead they steamed slowly up York river and anchored at a point a few miles beyond Hampton. Like their sister ships in the James, they will remain until old Father Time, the tides, fishes and crabs puncture holes in their bottoms.

Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Ford Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in price at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached on the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

Community Club

A meeting of the St. Hilaire Community Club was held last Friday evening, which, in point of attendance, was probably the largest gathering of its kind since the club was organized.

The first numbers on the program consisted of recitations, songs, etc. by lower grade pupils which were well received. Instrumental selections, a piano duet, and songs by the quartette were other geatly appeciated numbers. The speaker of the evening was A. D. Wilson who is directer of the agricultural extension division of the University of Minnesota. His talk was along the line of community betterment touching on those subjects that are of special interest to this community. Mr. Wison complimented the community on the splendid new school building which he said was one of the best of its kind he had seen. He praised the dairymen in this vicinity for their foresight in erecting a new creamery building for their important and rapidly growing industry. Mr. Wilson's address was an inspiration to all who heard it, and he will be welcome here at any future time.

Following Mr. Wilson, Supt. S. L. Johnson took occassion to thank the people for support and good will shown him during the past two years he has headed the local school. Mr. Johnson, who is leaving to take up further studies at the University, was really the originator of the community club work here. He has labored hard to make it, as well as the school, a success. That his work was appreciated was evidenced by a standing vote of thanks accorded him by all present at the meeting. Committees were appointed to make preparations for a community club picnic the date for which was set as Thursday, June 16. Further announcemet about the picnic will appear in these columns next week.

Editor L. D. Converse of Goodridge, came down with the high school ball team from that place Saturday to renew acquaintances and to greet old friends.

Homes of the Middle Ages.

The two most essential improvements in architecture during this period, one of which had been missed by the sagacity of Greece and Rome, were chimneys and glass windows. Nothing apparently can be more simple than the former; yet the wisdom of ancient times had been content to let the smoke escape by an aperture in the center of the roof; and a discovery, of which Vitruvius had not a glimpse, was made, perhaps in this country, by some forgotten semi-barbarian. About the middle of the Fourteenth century the use of chimneys is distinctly mentioned in England and in Italy; but they are found in several of our castles which bear a much older date.

Have to Eat the Leavings.

The women of California and other fruit-producing states of the Pacific coast are complaining that, while they are charged high prices for the fruit that they must buy, they are unable to get anything but the second-grade produce. Under ordinary circumstances the choicest fruit is sent to the eastern markets and only when the market is glutted are they able to get the best.

In the special election held last evening to vote on the matter of issuing bonds of the local school district in the amount of $20,000.00 ,to take up outstanding orders of like amount, the issued was carried by a record vote of 77 to 1. Issuance of bonds at this time will result in a direct saving of from five to six hundred dollars a year, and will also be the means of lowering the tax levy to that extent. With outstanding orders it is necessary to take some up from time to time, and issuing bonds will do away with that extra levy each year.

Find Old Church Ruins Under Rheims Cathedral

Paris.—The work of repairing the ruined Cathedral of Rheims has brought to light the buried remains of ancient churches which formerly stood on the same site. Under the pavement of the choir, which was shattered by German shells, have been found the old foundations of the Cathedral of St. Hincmar which was destroyed by fire in the Ninth century. Beneath these ruins workmen came upon traces of the first church to stand on this hallowed ground, the Church of St. Remi, built in the Fifth century.

Under the broken high altar was discovered a hoard of 250 pieces of ancient silver and near this a sealed up and long forgotten well. From the bottom of this well a worn lead pipe leads the water away into the earth and it is thought that this originally connected with the long lost baptismal font where Clovis was received into the church. Antiquarians from all parts of France have come to Rheims to examine the discoveries.

AIR TRIP RESTORES VOICE

Underwood & Underwood

Upon the advice of Dr. Charles H. McEnerney of the public health service Henry A. Renz took an airplane ride to restore his speech, the power of which mysteriously disappeared eight months ago.

While taking a "nose dive," 14,000 feet over Bolling, Wash., he suddenly "found his voice." Upon landing he hastened to telephone to his mother.

LONDON KIDDIES USE MUSEUM

Children Not Only See Interesting Things but Also Learn Useful Arts.

London.—Museums in the great American cities might well follow the example set by those in London, which on every school holiday or vacation are filled with children from the homes of the poor in the neighborhood.

But it must be said that at this season the children are attracted to the museums quite as much by the warmth of the galleries as by the treasures they contain.

It is in South Kensington museum that these children enjoy themselves most, for not only is there a room where the things that chiefly interest them are assembled and an official children's guide to explain them, but at every holiday season classes are formed.

If a child is found, like the small boy of 7 who was making a charcoal drawing of Rodin's "St John"—though this was an exceptionally ambitious attempt—there are drawing teachers who will help him.

Other teachers give up their holidays to teach small fingers to do art needlework or to stencil or to paint designs.

Too Many Larks.

Corpus Christi, Tex.—"Oh, listen to the lark," is not a popular refrain in south Texas this year. There are more larks in this district of the state than for many years, farmers say, and they are descending upon the cornfields in such numbers that the grain is being pulled up almost as rapidly as it can sprout.

The high cost of ammunition is the chief protection enjoyed by the birds the farmers say, but some of them are adopting an ingenious method of poisoning. Oats are sprouted, and soaked in poison and then scattered over the field intended to be protected.

Stork Spoils Feast.

Smith Center, Kan.—It was butchering day at the C. A. Garrison home the other day. Help had been summoned, the knives sharpened, water heated, the derrick raised and the scalding barrel tilted to the correct angle. Then the boss and help adjourned to a small shed to dispatch the intended victim, a large sow. But lo! they found her surrounded by six frisky young pigs, born only a few hours before. Mr. Garrison is now advertising for a hog already killed and dressed.

PLAN TO ERADICATE CHOLERA

Swine Breeders of Indiana County Working to Stamp Out All Traces of Disease.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A county free from hog cholera this year is the goal to which swine breeders in Steuben county, Ind., are working under the guidance of the local county agent and the district veterinarian of the United States Department of Agriculture. As a result of a persistent campaign for the control of cholera and strict organized effort to eradicate it, there has been a remarkable decrease in the disease in the county during the last two years. In 1917 the loss from cholera in the county, according to the county agent, was about $10,000. In 1918 it was a little less than $5,000, and in 1919 it was about the same. In 1920, however, only three cases occurred in the county, which leads the swine breeders to believe that if their efforts to control the disease are continued cholera can be practically eradicated.

CLUB MEMBERS SECURE PIGS

Registered Animals Given to Boys and Girls in Mississippi—Scholarship at End.

A public-spirited man in Fayette county, Mississippi, gave six registered pigs to the boys' and girls' pig-club work last year, with the understanding that each one who received a pig was to give back to the club one pig from the first litter and one from the second. The donated animals were drawn for by members from each beat and one from the county at large. The recipients were very proud of their pigs. The six from the first litters were distributed in December. If the plan is continued for five years it is estimated that 204 registered pigs will be given away at the close of that time, and it is hoped that purebred hogs will be found on every farm in the county. If these plans mature as is hoped, the 204 which will be available for gifts at the end of the five years will be put up at auction and the proceeds used for a scholarship to the State Agricultural and Mechanical college, which will be awarded yearly to the winner of the county pig-club championship.

ALFALFA AS HORSE ROUGHAGE

Plant Is High in Protein and Minerals and Is Especially Good for Young Stock.

Alfalfa receives great favor as a horse roughage. It is high in minerals and protein and is especially good for young stock. Because it is laxative in effect and high in protein, it is always best to limit the amount of alfalfa to one-half or two-thirds of the total hay ration. The rest may be timothy hay. Use alfalfa with a ration that is low in protein. Corn as a grain and alfalfa as a roughage make a balanced ration.

BEST LIVE STOCK CHEAPEST

Opinion of Virginia Farmer Who Thinks Breeders Are Aiming to Procure Purebreds.

"From 30 years' experience in breeding thoroughbred horses and later dairy cattle, I have found that the best is the cheapest." This is the opinion of a Virginia farmer in a statement to the United States Department of Agriculture. "I think all raisers of live stock in Virginia are aiming to procure purebred sires."

Good Mixture for Hogs.

It is good policy, where possible, to keep charcoal, wood ashes, slaked lime and salt in a sheltered trough where hogs can have access to same at will.

Silage for Horses.

Silage should not be considered as a mainstay for horses, as its use is preferable only in limited amounts as a small supplement to the regular ration.

Important in Sow's Ration.

High content of protein and mineral matter is required in the sow's ration, because her milk is high in these materials which form the bone and muscle of the young [illegible]

Certain Advantages of Partial Payment Investing

We do not know of any other partial payment plan for investing that equals ours in convenience, fairness and financial return to the investor.

An investor on our plan undertakes to purchase a definite number of shares of Northern States Power Preferred Stock at the rate of $5.00 (or more) per share per month. He obtains the stock for the same price as the cash investor. He makes a first payment and receives an ownership certificate upon which his subsequent payments are endorsed.

During the payment period each deposit as made earns interest for the investor at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the day it is paid in. When the payments are completed the ownership is exchanged for a permanent Preferred Stock certificate, paying a return (at the present price of the stock) of 8.4 per cent a year divided into four dividend checks, received every 90 days.

If an investor cannot or decides not to complete his payments, he has the privilege of withdrawing his funds in which case he receives them back in full with 3 per cent interest added for the time the Company has had use of his money. There is no forfeiture or loss.

The steady accumulation of wealth by means of this method will beat the Get Rich Quick schemes 999 times out of 1000.

An 8.4 per cent investment backed by an 11 years dividend record.

The "Two in One" Trinket Shop

By DOROTHY DOUGLASS.

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

They were both approaching the same destination—he from the west of Bleecker street, and she from the east.

The tiny vacant shop that occupied a position as near the center of the block as was possible was their destination.

So far, however, John was quite unconscious of a slip of a girl in a rakish black velvet tam-o'-shanter with a huge orange tassel dangling over one ear, and equally unconscious was Eva of the approach of a big man in loose fitting tweeds that somehow proclaimed an individual character—not one of the common or garden variety of young man.

Each was bent on inspecting with a view to renting the tiny shop on Bleecker street that boasted a new coat of green paint around the quaint little door and decently large window.

Eva spent a priceless second or two in adoration of it before she realized that the tall young man approaching her drew a key from his pocket and was even then inserting it in the huge lock.

She caught an indignant breath, for her key which the real estate agent had lent her was still in the archives of her beaded bag.

Condon was scarcely inside the green door on his tour of inspection when he knew he had been followed and turned to see Eva, scarlet cheeked and ready to quarrel, on the same mission. He, however, had arrived first and knew he liked the small shop well enough to sign a lease.

Eva too liked it. There couldn't be a more adorable, more perfect shop in the whole of Greenwich village and the location was ideal. The window was exquisite for the display of her cushions, shoe boxes and dainty bits of convenience for the small home. The rent was considerably more than she felt equal to, but Eva held high hopes and was not to be daunted at the very start. But was this first arrival in the shop going to be her first obstacle? She glanced tragically at the length of his legs and knew he could easily outwalk her to the real estate office and sign a lease for the shop before she could hope to get there. The telephone would not be satisfactory should she even by superhuman effort manage to get the number within an hour.

"Mine, Too," Laughed Eva.

Eva knew by the satisfaction written all over him that he had found just what he wanted. Eva felt desperate. Had Condon been the kind of man any one could hate that emotion would assuredly have arisen in Eva's breast.

"Nifty little shop," he said, turning on her suddenly. "I have combed the village for just such a place."

"So have I." Eva's voice was plaintive and her eyes—well, Condon had his first look into them.

"Oh, I say," he said regretfully, "were you interested too?"

"Interested!" exclaimed Eva. "I never saw a more adorable little shop. I could just die happy if I were successful in it."

Condon laughed joyously. "Living happily would be a bit better, wouldn't it?"

He looked at Eva with speculative eyes.

"What is your line? Batiks, painted lingerie or something strictly feminine?"

"Nothing so artistic," Eva told him. "I make shoe boxes and all kinds of accessories like footstools, cushions and useful things that can be used openly and not hidden behind the piano as things are in many studios."

Condon spent another moment in contemplation.

"Is there any reason why we couldn't take the shop together? I will be alone in my business and would have to put up a card, 'Out for lunch' or 'Home with a cold' if I couldn't be here. I make all kinds of brass, copper and carved wood [illegible] rather well together."

"How about us, though?" Eva's hopes had risen high. The idea was splendid and they could help each other in no end of ways.

"I'm willing to take a chance if you are," Condon said, and offered his hand.

They shook hands and each was conscious of having formed a delightful partnership.

They took immediate possession of the shop and at Eva's suggestion called it the "Two In One," and Condon with a tin of blue paint and goodly sized brush put the name over the green door. His most artistic beaten copper knocker he also added to the door. Eva put exquisite soft blue curtains against the green of the window frame and with a mellow yellow light behind the "Two In One" shop presented a most attractive exterior.

There were no papers signed on the partnership. The two just accepted each other in happy-go-lucky trust. In the center of the window Eva had put one of Condon's most beautiful copper vases and over it, suggesting a lamp, one of her own soft yellow shades. The stocks sold beautifully together—candle sticks, incense burners, cigarette boxes, with cushions, footstools and shades.

And each night when it was time to close the shop it was with lingering glances at the cozy warmth of it. Condon locked up the door and Eva slipped out into the night on the arm of the young man who had called for her each night since the very beginning.

Condon's girl came in too, from time to time and while seeming to be interested in the salable articles sent many a dark look at Eva as she brightly talked to this or that customer. Eva did not care much for the type of girl her partner had selected for the matrimonial sea nor did Condon exactly fancy Eva's prospective husband. However, neither had the bad taste to air his or her opinions in the matter.

Business was going along splendidly and the "Two In One" might truthfully be called the most attractive shop in the village.

And one bright morning Condon arrived with an unusual happiness radiating from his magnetic person and Eva came in with a brilliancy that quite matched the sunny morning.

"Kind of perky this morning, aren't you?" Condon greeted her.

"You don't express misery yourself," laughed Eva.

"I suppose I should, though," lamented Condon.

"I am heartless not to be grief laden, too," sighed Eva.

"My engagement was broken last night," grinned Condon.

"Mine, too," laughed Eva.

"Elsie raised Ned about our partnership and accused me of loving you," confessed Condon.

"So did Jack," blushed Eva.

It was just as well that Eva had not as yet pulled back the blue curtains to let in the morning sun, for it seemed as if another partnership was being swiftly and spontaneously negotiated for.

LEAVE THEIR SONGS UNSUNG

Music of Rare Violins Lost When Their Soul Is Imprisoned in the Dust of Museums.

The destiny of the fine old violins made by the master craftsmen, the Stradivarius, Amati and Guarnerius families and others of the seventeenth century, repose best in the hands of true musicians, who can best appreciate them and evoke their splendid, mellow tones for the delight of mankind. Such is the opinion expressed in a recent article in the New York Times, which makes the additional point that collectors of violins play an important part in furthering that destiny.

Collectors assemble rare instruments which otherwise might have lain, forgotten and in disuse, and preserve them from the hands of vandals. Thus it is made possible for great musicians to possess the violins which might have perished and been lost to posterity. The violins come into the possession of the master players often through those who collect for sale, or through the dissipation of some collection.

One fate is dreaded for rare old violins by their lovers. That is the possibility that a person who has made a fine collection will bequeath it all to some museum. Connoisseurs may there gaze at the violins under their glass cases, and admire the excellence of their workmanship and proportions, but the golden notes that might be drawn from the instruments are forever silent.

Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Ford Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in priee at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached an the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

INVENTS FLOATING SAFE.

The Dutch Indian mail steamers have just been equipped with floating safes large enough to contain all of the ships' valuables and registered mail. They look something like a cross between a floating buoy and a submarine, and are equipped to ring bells, shoot off skyrockets, flash lights and blow horns.

The safe, the invention of a Dutchman, is claimed to be absolutely unsinkable, and, if cast overboard in event its ship went down, would go floating about the sea attracting attention to itself until its clockwork machinery ran down. It would carry a number of rockets, to be set off at regular intervals, and its machinery, it is claimed, would operate it for more than a month.

Supt. Johnson Leaves

After closing two very successful years as superintendent of the local schools, Supt. S. L. Johnson left Tuesday for his home at Hallock. Mr. Johnson has decided to take up some advanced work at the state university the coming fall and does not expect to re-engage in teaching for another year or two. During his two years here, Mr. Johnson made a host of warm friends who regret exceedingly to see him depart, but who wish him success in whatever he may undertake.

Horrible Murder

Miss Marie Wick, 18 year old Grygla girl, was assaulted and beaten to death by a fiend in human form at a Fargo hotel last Monday night. The young lady passed thru here Monday afternoon enroute to Pettibone, N. D., to visit an aunt, and stopped at the Fargo hotel that night. Only meagre clues are available to the Fargo police, and thus far no arrests have been made. The remains of the murdered girl passed thru here today for Grygla where the parents reside.

The Uninvited Guest.

One evening I dropped in to see some intimate friends. When I entered the house I discovered to my surprise that they had friends for dinner. Before I could excuse myself their youngest daughter, Elizabeth, asked me if I had been invited to the party. Upon answering in the negative, she said, "Well, why did you come?"—Chicago Tribune.

Work and Men.

Work is the greatest boon ever conferred on man. Had he been able to live without it his development would have been hopeless. Look at the races in whom life is easy, where Nature is most luxuriant and productive, where, there being no cold, no clothes are needed, and where food can be gathered without the planting or cultivation. They are the weakest of God's creatures and no progress can be expected of them. The strongest races are those who have [illegible]

Flood In Colorado

Heavy rains and resultant breaking of some large reservoir dams in valley of the Arkansas river in Colorado, caused one of the worst floods known in history of the country, in Pueblo and nearby towns last week. Thousands of people are homeless, and property damage will reach millions. The death list is estimated at several thousands, though it might be less when order is restored so an accurate count can be taken.

The Asberg family, who resided here until a year ago, are residents of Longmont, one of the towns in the flooded area, but newspaper reports state the flood was not as serious there as in other towns, and no deaths are reported from that place.

Car Turns Turtle

A party of young men from Thief River driving a Ford thru here Tuesday night, came to grief on the road south of town. Either the driver lost control, or the car could not run straigh without control, whichever was the case, but it turned upside down in the ditch. None of the party claimed injury and they went back home by livery leaving their car here to undergo repairs.

The Thief River aggregation of ball tossers had a kink put in their winning streak last Sunday when they met defeat at Gonvick.

Farewell Party

A farewell party was given in honor of the high school by Supt. S. L. Johnson last Saturday evening prior to his departure. The gathering was held in the school house, and was a very enjoyable occasion. To show their appreciation of his efforts in their behalf, the pupils presented Mr. Johnson a fine emblem ring as token of remembrance.

Defeat Middle River

The local ball team met and defeated Middle River at that place last Sunday by a score of 8 to 2. A drizzling rain during part of the game made playing unpleasant. Tough roads were encountered by the boys on the return trip.

The valedictory address was delivered by Josephine Hallemeck, and President A. S. Wilson of the board of education presented the graduates their diplomas after which Benediction was pronounced by Rev. Nelson.

Members of the high school graduating class are: Josephine Hallemeck, Tessie King, Mabel Loberg, Mildred Fallman, Gabrielle Cathelineau and Dorothy Martz.

RESENTS THRUSTS AT MEDICS

New York Newspaper Condemns the "Jokes" Made at Expense of a Glorious Profession.

From the time of Galen the medical profession has been the butt of the jesters. Most of the jokes are variants of "The surgeon buries his mistakes." Addison, in the Spectator, thought it good humor to write: "We may lay it down as a maxim that when a nation abounds in physicians it grows thin of people. . . . This body of men in our own country may be described like the British army in Caesar's time. Some of them slay in chariots and some on foot. If the infantry do less execution than the charioteers it is because they cannot be carried so soon into all quarters of the town and dispatch so much business in so short a time."

Yet there were doubtless 50 doctors in London who would have given their days and nights to Addison, though he hadn't a guinea to pay.—New York Herald.

Potency of Sunny Souls.

We all know what a draught of refreshment it is when a sunny person comes into our company. A cheerful member redeems the meeting, a cheerful daughter is a godsend to the family, a cheerful workman lights up the shop, and even a cheerful face among the passengers of a railway coach or waiting room makes a distinct contribution to the well-being of all the crowd. Why not be one of these sunshine spreaders? Why not have every group glad to welcome you, every party brighten when you appear, every one in the room sit up and look relieved when you enter? Make your own sunshine and carry it with you, and you get what every creature wants—appreciation and affection. Perhaps it is because you are unlit that you are unloved.—Dr. Frank Crane [illegible]

YOUTH KNEW HUMAN NATURE

His Answer to Moral Question Marked Him as One Singled Out for Future Greatness.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, the famous educationalist, said at a dinner in Brooklyn:

"People talk a lot of nonsense about telling character by the walk, by the handwriting and so on. Now, there's one way you can really tell character, and that is by putting moral questions to school children.

"I remember a schoolboy who answered one of these moral questions, back in 1880, in such a manner as to convince me that he would become a realistic novelist. Well, that boy is a realistic novelist, and a good one today.

"The moral question put to his mates and to him was this:

"'If a boy sold a pair of broken skates, and he knew they were broken while the buyer did not, what would you think of the transaction?'

"To this question the realistic novelist in embryo wrote out the following reply;

"'The boy was unfair, he was a cheat and a thief, and would run away happy and buy some cigarettes or maybe a box of mixtures.'"

Sounds That Bounce.

Like light, sound is formed by a vibration or a moving of the atmosphere. These sound waves travel through the air precisely as water waves travel through the sea, or as ripples are formed when one casts a pebble into a pond. Ripples of water are thrown back when they reach the edge of the pond, but owing to the loss of momentum the return wave is usually less noticeable than the original one. The air, however, being more resilient than water, bounces back when one of the sound waves strikes an obstruction, and eventually returns to its original source—the force of the return being largely dependent upon the nature of the obstruction and the atmospheric conditions prevailing at the time. It is this return of the sound waves that we call an echo.

Eve of First of May.

The eve of the first of May is known in German legend as Walpurgis night, the Detroit News recalls. Then witches and other workers of evil hold high revel and offer sacrifices to the devil as their lord and master. The scene of their festival in Germany is the Brocken, a famous peak in the Harz mountains, 3,745 feet high. This annual festival was, in the popular belief, conceded to them in recompense for the loss they sustained when by St. Walpurga the Saxons were persuaded to renounce paganism with its rites for Christianity. St. Walpurga was an English nun, who, in the middle of the Eighth century, went as a missionary to Germany. She was successful and was held in high honor by those she converted.

Certain Advantages of Partial Payment Investing

We do not know of any other partial payment plan for investing that equals ours in convenience, fairness and financial return to the investor.

An investor on our plan undertakes to purchase a definite number of shares of Northern States Power Preferred Stock at the rate of $5.00 (or more) per share per month. He obtains the stock for the same price as the cash investor. He makes a first payment and receives an ownership certificate upon which his subsequent payments are endorsed.

During the payment period each deposit as made earns interest for the investor at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the day it is paid in. When the payments are completed the ownership is exchanged for a permanent Preferred Stock certificate, paying a return (at the present price of the stock) of 8.4 per cent a year divided into four dividend checks, received every 90 days.

If an investor cannot or decides not to complete his payments, he has the privilege of withdrawing his funds in which case he receives them back in full with 3 per cent interest added for the time the Company has had use of his money. There is no forfeiture or loss.

Varying Views of Marriage.

The definition of marriage has particularly appealed to humorists. Petit-Senn has summed it up thus: "Marriage is a port in the storm, but more often a storm in the port"; while Edmond About uses another and more violent metaphor. Says this gentleman: "Marriage is in life like a duel in the midst of battle." Beaumarchais, on the other hand, is milder, but equally as cynical. He remarks that "of all serious things marriage is the most ludicrous." Balzac, who really never married, but who had much to say on the subect, puts it in this terse manner: "Marriage is a fight to the death." La Rochefoucauld, the greatest of the French epigrammatists, compromises with the extremists and remarks: "There are good marriages, but there are no delicious ones." How different is this esthetic viewpoint to the pedant observation of Sulpice Guillaume Gavarni, who says: "When a man [illegible] who has him [illegible]

An Angel Strayed From Heaven

By WILLIAM FALL.

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

George Chapin was reading a letter from his married sister when he sat in his bachelor apartment, and he scratched his head in evident perplexity.

"My dear George," his sister wrote, "we are in great trouble about Walter. He has had a terrible quarrel with his father about some dreadful actress whom he says he is engaged to be married to, and Philip—you know how hasty he is—has ordered him out of the house. You know Walter may expect to inherit a comfortable fortune, and it is natural that this woman, Linda Manners, as she calls herself, should want to get her fingers on it. Now, George, you are a man of forty-five, and of ripe experience. She lives in your town. Can't you get to her and find out whether a sufficient inducement would persuade her to leave Walter alone? And don't forget to tell her that if she marries Walter he won't get a penny of his father's fortune."

There was a tap at the door and, as George Chapin put the letter aside, a young man entered. He was a good-looking boy, in his early twenties, and George was uncommonly proud of him.

"Hello, Walter," he said, rising and offering his hand. Sit down. So you've been getting into another scrape, eh?"

"Please don't allude to my fiancee, Miss Manners, as a scrape, Uncle George," replied the young man with dignity.

"Well, Walter, we won't quarrel over words. But do you realize that you are up against a serious predicament? How are you going to earn a living if your father disinherits you?"

"Uncle," said the young man impressively, "if once you saw Linda—Miss Manners—I think you'd agree with me that she's worth sacrificing any amount of money for."

"Well, where is she?" his uncle asked.

"At the Lyric theater," answered his nephew. "Say, uncle, what did mother write you?"

"She wrote me that—oh, the devil, Walter, I'm no hand at intrigue. Read it," said his uncle, thrusting the letter into the other's hands.

Walter Hampton read it and returned it with a grin. "I can forgive the suggestion," he said, "because I know mother means well. She's just hasty, that's all."

George Chapin smiled a little sadly.

"My dear nephew," said the other, "you're going up to Escombe on that fishing trip you wrote me about, and you're going to be gone three days, and you will neither see nor communicate with your inamorata until the time is past. Otherwise I wash my hands of the affair."

Consequently it was without serious misgivings that Walter Hampton went off on his fishing trip, and though the time dragged wearily, he returned to town eager to hear his fiancee's praises from his uncle's lips.

His first surprise was when the door of the spacious apartment was opened by a maid—a new maid in cap and apron, who looked at him inquiringly, as though he had no business there.

"My uncle—Mr. Chapin. Is he at home?" asked Walter.

The maid hesitated. "Yes, sir," she said at length, "but Mrs. Chapin doesn't receive visitors—"

"Mrs. Chapin!" exclaimed the young man. "Who is she?"

"Haven't you heard of Mr. Chapin's marriage, sir?" simpered the maid. "I believe it was very sudden, sir."

Walter pushed past her, ran along the hall, and broke into the reception room without ceremony. A woman rose from a chair—Linda!

Walter did not see the library door open. He rushed toward her. "Linda!" he cried. "You here? You? What does this mean? You're married to my uncle?"

The elder man had come softly up and placed a hand on his shoulder. George Chapin was smiling; his nephed was purple with fury. He flung himself upon his uncle, striking out wildly with his fists, and they fought all over the room, till finally the other got him down, pressed his face into the sofa pillows, twisted his arms, and sat on him.

"Linda, my dear, come here," he said. "Shall I tell this young idiot the truth, or will you?"

The girl, who had retreated in fear to the farther corner of the room, now came forward. There were tears in her eyes, but a smile played about her mouth. "You tell him," she said.

"Then listen," said George Chapin. "Alice Manners—now Mrs George Chapin—is an old friend who had passed out of my life for years. We had a lovers' quarrel long ago. That's why I've never married. When I found her again I took her right around to the city hall and got a license to marry her, and then rushed her to a minister. That was two days ago. I wasn't taking any more chances. Understand that, lunatic? And from the way your father and I mauled each other when we were boys, to see who should propose to Alice—that is, my wife—I guess he won't have any more objections to your marrying Miss Linda, her daughter."

Huck Finn Was Considered 'Harmful.'

It is interesting to remember when one sees "Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" listed as one of the 30 books necessary for all-around culture by the New York public library, that when the book was new, some 25 years ago, the Boston public library and others about the country refused to place the book in the circulating departments. The reason, as published, was that the book would be harmful to the youthful mind.—Milwaukee Journal.

Few Artists Paint the Cat.

The beauty of the cat is very deceptive, for under the grace of the furry exterior lie concealed steel-like muscles. Nothing in art is more difficult than to draw or paint a cat. Those who catch the feline's softness usually miss its strength, and vice versa. Rosa Bonheur seldom painted him, preferring his less subtle brother, the lion. Landseer, after two youthful attempts, threw up the sponge.

MUSIC IS SENT OVER WIRE

How Skaters in China Enjoy Favorite Recreation With Regular Jazz Accompaniment.

Folks who are prone to believe there is no such thing as real wintering in sunny China will be interested in the announcement that the Peking club possesses one of the most up-to-date ice rinks of the day. Thanks to the introduction of the latest American developments in telephone amplification, the skaters who have been making the rink their headquarters this year have been able to perform with a regular jazz accompaniment.

The apparatus was of the same type as that used at President Harding's inauguration. Several amplifying horns were set up about the ceiling of the rink and connected by wires and an amplifying device with a phonograph run by a Celestial youngster in the club basement. The effect is more satisfying than the brassiest of brass bands.

The Peking club has a first-class hockey team. It is made up of the best skaters among the foreign element at the Chinese capital. Its followers maintain that it can hold its own with any average American college sextette.

CAREFUL PUBLICITY.

"One of these days," said Senator Sorghum, "I'm going to quit work and go fishing."

"Do you feel fatigued?"

"No. But I want to get an announcement to my constituents that'll sound as if I have been working hard enough to need a vacation."

DISPLAY OF ERUDITION.

"Does your husband find much pleasure in gardening?"

"Yes," replied Mrs. Crosslots; "but not in the way you'd think. He gets most of his enjoyment memorizing the botanical names on the envelopes and surprising company when he asks 'em to pass the vegetables."

FARM LIVE STOCK

MUCH LOSS IN BEEF CATTLE

Average Price Per Head Dropped From $44.22 in 1919 to $31.41 in 1921—Hogs Also Drop.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Beef cattle on farms lost in average value per head from January 1, 1919, to January 1, 1921, all that they gained during the participation of the United States in the World war and more than half as much again, according to the bureau of crop estimates, United States Department of Agriculture. The loss occurred mostly in 1920. This has been established beyond doubt by the recent annual investigation of prices of farm animals per head made by the bureau. The average price per head, all ages, of cattle other than milk cows was $35.92 in 1917, $44.22 in 1919, and $31.41 in 1921. On January 1, last year, the farm price was $4.51 below that of 1917, some months before this country declared war.

In the case of swine on farms, the average price per head, all ages, declined in the two years 1919 and 1920, 88 per cent of the gain in 1917 and 1918, and two-thirds of the decline was in 1920.

From 1916 to 1919, the average farm value of the product of corn per acre increased from $21.67 to $38.54. The corn crop of 1920, taking the average value of the product of one acre, fell to $20.93, and this drop not only wiped out the gain of the preceding three years but perceptibly exceeded it. The commonly used percentage of decline since the break in price began, fails to discover this fact, because a percentage of decline from a higher number is not comparable with a percentage of gain during the preceding years, which is based on a comparatively low number.

Cattle on a Southern Range.

FARM DOG IS ALSO PUREBRED

Ohio Farmer Keeps Registered Cattle and Hogs—Poultry Entirely of Pure Breeding.

Of 95 head of live stock on an Ohio farm, 90 are purebred, according to the owner, who is co-operating with the United States Department of Agriculture in the better-sires movement. His statement of the pure breeding is verified by two other live stock owners.

A registered Aberdeen-Angus bull and a registered Duroc-Jersey boar are kept. One grade Angus cow and four crossbred mares are the only stock not purebred. The poultry are entirely Barred Plymouth Rocks of pure breeding. The farm dog, a beagle, is also purebred.

TREES THRIVE IN ODD LAND

Hillside, Corners and Waste Strips Can Be Made Quite Useful in Growing Timber.

By planting hillsides, odd corners on the farm where a road or railroad has cut it off and places where erosion has been had, a good return on such an investment can be gotten. If land is subject to overflow cottonwood will grow and it will in a short time furnish desirable rough lumber.

Soft woods make excellent fence posts when treated with creosote and have been found to last over ten years which makes them desirable from the standpoint of cost.

SUMMER ATTENTION TO HOGS

Foundation Laid at This Time to Begin Things Necessary for Cheap Production of Pork.

You may think that your hog crop needs the least of your thought and attention during the summer months, but it would pay many pork producers immensely to give deeper thought to this summer handling of the herd than they do, for at this time can easily be laid the foundation of successful avoidance of many troubles as well as to begin some things necessary for cheap pork production.

SUPERIORITY OF SUGAR BEET

Authoritative Reports and Opinions on Feeding Value of By-Products for Live Stock.

There is now available a considerable library of authoritative reports and opinions on live stock feeding with sugar beet by-products. Experiments extending over a term of years have been conducted, showing the comparative superiority of these feeds.

The High Cost of Rust

MOST farm implements are strongly built and can stand a lot of abuse and still give pretty good service. It is well that this is so or the machinery bill for the nation would be even greater than its present staggering figure. A machine without protection will last about half as long as one that is properly taken care of, and this does not take into consideration the extra cost of repairs necessary on the machinery left outside

AVERAGE LIFE IN YEARS

Machine	Properly Protected	Not Protected
Cultivator	12 years	7 years
Corn Planter	17 years	7 years
Binder	14 years	2 years
Disc Harrow	15 years	8 years
Dump rake	16 years	7½ years
Side Delivery Rake	12 years	8 years
Drill	14 years	6½ years
Plow	14 years	9 years
Hay Loader	12 years	7 years
Manure Spreader	12 years	6 years
Mower	15 years	9 years
Wagon	2 years	8 years
	14.8 years	7.5 years

The above figures, compiled by a leading Agricultural College, are the result of on extensive investigation and prove beyond a doubt the economy of a machine shed.

Announcement

Mr. Edsel B. Ford, President of the Ford Motor Company, Gives Out the Following Statement:

"The price of the Fordson Tractor has been reduced from $790.00 to $625.00, effective immediately.

"The price change has been made possible through lower costs of materials and the fact that we are now located in our new Tractor Plant with greatly increased economic manufacturing facilities.

"We are particularly pleased in being able to bring about this big reduction in price at this time because the farmer needs all the help we can give him and this big cut in price will be the means of placing a valuable power unit within the reach of practically every one of them.

"There is no change in the present Ford Car and Truck prices, which are already at the lowest possible figure and now with rock bottom reached an the tractor price a further reduction in price of either the Car, Truck or Tractor is out of the question; in fact, the big price cuts have been made in anticipation of continuous maximum production and increases may be necessary before long if a large volume of new business is not obtained. Therefore, present prices of Ford products cannot be guaranteed against possible increases."

Ask for the book, "The Fordson at Work," which will be supplied free of cost. Let me demonstrate the value of the Fordson on your farm, in your factory, lumber yard, coal yard, or in any general hauling or power work you have to do, and let me have your Fordson order.

The game was tie until last half of the sixth when Red Lake ran in three scores which they duplicated in the seventh and topped with five in the last of the eighth, The final result was due not so much to extraordinary playing by Red Lake as to a series of errors and hard luck by the local team.

In their wild state all sheep were furnished with a pair of horns, but the number never exceeded two until some curious specimens were discovered in several isolated sections of Asia. These species had from four to six horns, the upper set being the largest, the other two being graduated with the smallest ones just above the eyes. Curiously enough, the two lower sets always curve upward, while the large pair curl downward, as do the horns of our domesticated sheep.

Pioneer Passee Away

Mrs. S. J. Naplin, an old and highly respected resident of this community died Monday evening at her home in Polk Center township. Cause of death is given as old age. Mrs. Kjosa Naplin was born in Westergotland, Sweden, on Jnue 22, 1836, and lacked only nine days of being 85 years old at time of death. She was married to Swan Naplin in 1868 and came to this country with her husband in 1880 and settled first at Dudley, Iowa, where the family resided until the following year, when they moved to Polk Center township, this county, which has been her home ever since.

She is survived by her aged husband and six children, the latter being John A., Erick August, Anna Matilda and Carl, all of Polk Center, Mary Elizabeth Johnson of Cass Lake, and Senator O. H. Naplin of Thief River Falls.

Funeral services will be conducted by Rev. A. F. Nelson this afternoon at the Black River Swedish Lutheran church of which Mrs. Naplin has been a member since its organization.

Creamery Meeting

A special meeting of stockholders of the local creamery was held at the village hall yesterday. In order to facilitate matters in rgard to the new building, a resolution was passed authorizing the creamery association to carry a larger indebtedness than heretofore. This paves the way for raising what additional capital is needed to complete and equip the new creamery and places the whole matter on a business basis.

Members of the M. E. Sunday School enjoyed a picnic last Sunday.

Gravel is being hauled for a foundation to be put under the M. E. church in the near future.

PROBABLY JOE WAS WISE

Uncle Might Reasonably Have Been Annoyed at the Nerve of His Small Nephew.

Joe's Uncle John has just come to their house to stay, and Joe was very much pleased. He was fond of this particular relative, and rarely passed the store in which he worked without going in to see him. But the other day when Aunt Nellie met Joe down town she found him outside, instead of inside, the store, waiting for her.

She started to say something, but noticed the lovely knit tie Joe had on, and instead said: "What a beautiful new tie you have, dear."

"It isn't mine. It's Uncle John's," Joe grinned back. And then after Aunt Nellie had remarked that Uncle John was indeed generous to lend him such an expensive tie, Joe responded: "He didn't loan it. I just borrowed it without asking. That was the reason I waited out here instead of going inside. I thought he needn't ever know about my borrowing his things."—Indianapolis News.

Peculiar Whistling Tree.

Travelers in Nubia and the Soudan have heard many weird stories of the whistling tree that is heard when the wind blows, but investigation developed the fact that on the soft shoots at the extremity insects lay their eggs, the development of which leaves a small opening through which the wind makes a sound that gave rise to the belief that the tree had a musical property.

BLINDNESS CAN BE AVERTED

Assertion Made That Proper Precautions Will Reduce Eye Accidents Fifty Per Cent.

Half of the blindness could be prevented if workers in the industrial plants would take the necessary precautions, according to Health Director Furbush, says the Philadelphia Record. There are 20,000 eye accidents reported annually by the state department of labor and industry in various Pennsylvania industries, including 300 cases of total loss of sight. In one hospital in this city 4,000 injuries to eyes are treated annually. Many accidents of this nature are due to carelessness and failure to adopt precautionary measures of prevention.

Accidents may be largely avoided by protection of the eyes in certain occupations by goggles, by avoiding the use of broken or old tools and by the proper equipment of protecting devices, Doctor Furbush says. Certain infectious diseases of the eyes may be avoided by abandoning the use of the common towel and by immediate consultation of a physician at the first sign of inflammation. Persons with defective eyesight should have their vision corrected early in life so that more extensive defects may be avoided. This holds true especially for nearsighted persons. Taking all causes together fully one-half can be prevented.

Certain Advantages of Partial Payment Investing

We do not know of any other partial payment plan for investing that equals ours in convenience, fairness and financial return to the investor.

An investor on our plan undertakes to purchase a definite number of shares of Northern States Power Preferred Stock at the rate of $5.00 (or more) per share per month. He obtains the stock for the same price as the cash investor. He makes a first payment and receives an ownership certificate upon which his subsequent payments are endorsed.

During the payment period each deposit as made earns interest for the investor at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the day it is paid in. When the payments are completed the ownership is exchanged for a permanent Preferred Stock certificate, paying a return (at the present price of the stock) of 8.4 per cent a year divided into four divideud checks, received every 90 days.

If an investor cannot or decides not to complete his payments, he has the privilege of withdrawing his funds in which case he receives them back in full with 3 per cent interest added for the time the Company has had use of his money. There is no forfeiture or loss.

The steady accumulation of wealth by means of this method will beat the Get Rich Quick schemes 999 times out of 1000.

An 8.4 per cent investment backed by an 11 years dividend record.

LIVE STOCK

KEEP PUREBRED LIVE STOCK

North Dakota Farmer Eliminates Runts by Liberal Feeding and Proper Management.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

To obtain the most rapid growth and best development of live stock keep good stock, and see that nothing checks its growth from the time it is born. This is the method by which a North Dakota farmer prevents runts among his animals.

In a letter on this subject to the United States Department of Agriculture, which has been studying the causes and prevention of undersized animals, he says, "In the 40 years of my farming and breeding and raising live stock of all kinds I do not remember a runt in any class or breed. I have always been a liberal feeder and a good caretaker. Besides, all stock had access to good, fresh water at all times. With this, in addition to good shelter and ventilation, it seems that my young stock would not stop growing from the time they were born. Use good judgment in feeding, and don't neglect the details."

There Is No Excuse for Runty Pigs.

A farmer in Vermont writes, "A well-bred animal well cared for will not produce runts. There is absolutely no excuse for one in live stock or poultry. By well-bred live stock I mean strong, healthy stock, well taken care of for several generations, and bred for constitution. This has been my experience from boyhood, first, with rabbits and game fowls, and later with sheep, hogs, horses and cattle. An accident to a well-bred and healthy animal will, if the accident occurs before it reaches maturity, affect its size but not its productive capacity. That is, it will not influence its ability to produce such young as it would have had if no accident had occurred. Eliminate all females that are not good mothers, and you will soon stamp the whole herd with constitution. Then with care, which means attention and feed, your runts will fail to materialize."

ONLY BEST PUREBREDS SOLD

Some Breeders Insist That Every Animal They Buy or Sell Must Pass Standard.

So strongly has the purpose of the better-sires campaign, now being conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture, appealed to some breeders that they are not content with purebreds only, but every animal they buy or sell in addition to being a purebred must pass a standard of excellence. The methods of one breeder in Upshur county, West Virginia, according to a report received by the department, illustrate this tendency. This breeder has a fine herd of Angus cattle. All calves which fall below the standard of excellence that he has set are not registered, but are either castrated or sold on the open market as common cattle.

GIVE EWES NUTRITIOUS FEED

Animals Entitled to Liberal Treatment While Carrying Young and Growing Wool.

After the ewes are bred they are growing their young, growing a crop of wool, maintaining their own body and should be fed accordingly. Give the ewes enough good, nutritious feed to keep them in a good healthy, thrifty condition. Where pasture is abundant, they will need no other feed, as green feed is the natural and best feed for sheep.

BROOD SOWS NEED EXERCISE

DISMANTLE FAMOUS SHIP.

The hospital ship Solace, formerly attached to the Atlantic fleet, has been placed out of commission at the Washington navy yard, where she arrived a few weeks ago from a cruise in the West Indies. The Solace was first fitted out as a hospital ship at the outbreak of the Spanish war, in 1898, and has been in active service almost continuously since that time. Her place with the Atlantic fleet will be taken by the more modern hospital ship Relief, regarded as the best equipped floating hospital in the world.

In accordance with an agreement, the Kantara bridge across the Suez canal, connecting the railway lines of Egypt and Palestine, is to be wrecked. It was erected to facilitate communication during the World war, but is regarded a menace to peacetime shipping. The Girl of the Wood

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

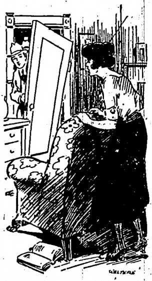
(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Robin Page sat on the side of her narrow bed in her hall room on the third floor of Mrs. Leeds' lodging house. Her pretty feet drummed a little tattoo on the floor until the exasperated man who occupied the room beneath and who hummed monotonously all the evening knocked on his ceiling with a hairbrush which sent Robin's feet up on the bed in a flurry of excitement.

"Of all the impossible situations," she groaned. "To think that my father's daughter, brought up in luxury, should be spending her days in a horrible stuffy office and her nights in this pen—and worst of all, I cannot make my salary meet my expenses and Mrs. Leeds threatens to put me out tomorrow! Of course, some of dad's friends would help me, but I'm too proud—I've got to reduce living expenses. How? She puzzled over this a while and then the memory of the old home, now closed and later to be torn down, haunted her. "I could go there, no one would know it, and I could come in on the trolley. Later I will get a better position—"

The novelty and the daring of the adventure appealed to Robin and the next day when she received her salary she paid Mrs. Leeds and, packing a supply of clothes in a couple of traveling bags, she sent her trunk into storage where there was some furniture saved from the wreck of her fallen fortunes.

Deprived of home, fortune, loved ones, all in one year, had stunned Robin Page, and she did not know how she had longed for the old place until the next day when she crept into the house and revisited beloved spots. At last she reached the upper floor, with tear-blinded eyes and sobbing lips, and decided that she would occupy her parent's room with the adjoining bathroom. It was sunny here even with the shutters closed, for the sunshine would sift through every crack.



Clutched the Back of Her Chair.

There was a fireplace with a grate. The house stood back from the road among thick trees and there would be little danger of discovery. She decided that for the present she would use a kerosene stove and lamp, and when it rained she might have a fire at night in the chimney.

She worked like a beaver all that Sunday. From all over the house she brought stray articles salvaged from the rooms, things which had been left for the ashman, but which were very precious to this bold pioneer. A sagging sofa from the attic was cautiously bumped down the stairs, a creaking, comfortable armchair followed.

There was a feeble table and a chest of drawers, and some rugs and draperies, deemed too worthless to sell, and odd utensils from the kitchen below. She added a few small things from the city stores, tugging her suitcase back and forth to town each day, until at last her house in the woods, as she dubbed it, was complete.

Weeks passed by and no one discovered Robin's hiding place. The girl grew rosy and her eyes recovered their old hope and luster. She found another and better position and was saving a little money against the day when the house should be demolished and she would be homeless again. She was determined never to be without a home of some sort in the future, something of her own, and not the stark, forlorn boarding house substitute. Of course, she knew there was danger of momentary discovery of her retreat and hasty eviction, but she had schooled herself to meet that, and she was glad that the old Arthurs place next door, whose chimney tops she could not even see through the trees, was also closed, as the owner, Tommy Arthurs, her old playmate, was traveling in India.

"A mighty hunter like Tommy Arthurs would smell my smoke right away," she thought. Her excursions home on the trolley each night were attended with some danger of recognition from old friends, but she had been very fortunate, and in these days of motors people did not look for John Page's daughter in the slim, veiled figure that came in on the Outline trolley car with bags and bundles, who alighted at Pole No. 14, beside a lonely road, and who finally disappeared through a broken gate which finally brought her to her hidden refuge.

"It is good to be home again," declared Tommy Arthurs, the night of his arrival from abroad. He had brought his intimate friend, Waldo Kent, out to spend the week-end with him and to decide what repairs the fine mansion needed. "I've got the Page property on my hands," remarked Kent as he lighted a cigarette after dinner. "I thought of tearing it down and putting some bungalows there, but you're next door and it might not suit you to have cottagers."

"It wouldn't," said Tommy gruffly. "I'll buy the old place from you, Wally. I used to know the Pages, and we had fine times growing up together—they're all gone now, save pretty Robin, and I don't know where she is—I must hunt her up."

"We might go over and look at the outside of it now. Though I have the keys, we wouldn't be able to see inside," suggested Waldo.

"Done," agreed Tommy, for the house seemed stifling after his years in the open.

They entered the grounds and explored a little bit in the faint moonlight. Suddenly Waldo clutched his friend's arm. "There's a light up there on the second floor, Tommy. It isn't fire, either."

"That's right. No other light in the house and this one's hidden—thick curtain over window. Tramps?"

"May be. Want to come along and investigate?"

"I'll go back to the house and get a couple of guns and sticks. Never know what we're up against out here on the outskirts."

They oiled the lock of the front door and let themselves noiselessly inside the vast entrance hall of the deserted house. Rubber soled shoes helped them up the stairs and presently they were before the door of the room, where a crack of light ran along the sill. A girl's voice was talking cheerily to some one.

"Now, old gray cat, you have had your supper and I've had mine and we are both going to sit down in this comfy chair and read!" Tommy's heart quickened for he believed he knew who belonged to that delightful voice.

It was Waldo Kent who entered without knocking. He simply put his big shoulder to the door and the ancient lock strained and gave way. So they burst in upon Robin and the cat who had come to live with her. The frightened girl jumped up and then clutched the back of her chair. These healthy young men were not lawbreakers and one face was dearly familiar. With a little cry she ran and put her arms around Tommy Arthurs. "Oh, Tommy, Tommy, it's so good to see some of the home folks again," she sobbed. Tommy flapped his free hand at the gaping Waldo. "I'll see you later, Wally, go and look at the moon, that's a good fellow—"

Waldo stayed an hour and when he came back the two who had been reunited had only reached the point where Tommy was fitting his mother's engagement ring upon Robin's slim finger.

"We missed each other a lot," explained Tommy, "but we never knew it till just this minute!"

"Is this house for sale?" asked the real estate man.

"Never," cried Tommy and Robin together.

The Masked Actress.

One had long grown accustomed to the thought that "all the world's a stage and all the men and women merely players. . . . And one man in his time plays many parts," and when Hamlet introduces his players one recognizes a state of affairs quite like a nest of Chinese boxes. But when it comes to an actress no longer showing her own face, but playing her part covered in a mask, of which even the eyes are not her own, the plot thickens, the very mask is masked, and the actress, who may by change of mask play her many parts in the course of one piece, becomes as elusive as that forest sprite which Russian folklore defines as having "one nostril and no back."—Christian Science Monitor.

No Apartment Houses in Japan.

Frequent earthquakes and low wages of servants account for the fact that Japanese families invariably live in separate houses. There is not one apartment house, not one family living in a hotel (save travelers) even in the decidedly Occidental city of Tokyo. Homes there are of small size, made of wood, bamboo and tile, built very light, so as to suffer the least damage in earthquakes. The most economic and practical size of a house, accordingly, is eight rooms, three stories high. This is the size of house most commonly used all over the country. It is just the right size for the average Japanese family.

That Was Later.

"You say the glare of his headlights confused you. Weren't his lamps dimmed?"

"They were after I got through with him," said the man who had the narrow escape. "I gave him such a nice pair of black eyes that he could hardly see out of them."—Kansas City Star.

Accounting for It.

"Mrs. Passy, who hates fast driving, came in after her motor trip looking like a thundercloud."

"I suppose that was because her car drove at lightning speed."

ST. HILAIRE WINS FAST BALL GAME

Thief River Loses To Locals By Score of 3 To 2 In Fine Exhibition.

The ball game between the semi-professional ball team of Thief River Falls and the St. Hilaire Gophers played, after the Community Club picnic last Thursday afternoon was one of the best exhibitions of the national pastime seen here for many years. In addition to the large crowd here for the picnic, about fifty auto loads of fans from Red Lake Falls and about the same number from Thief River Falls, were at the grounds, and every available foot of parking space was taken.

Thief River had three pitchers in their line up but Carlson occupied the mound for the visitors thruout the game. Narveson of McIntosh did the hurling for the local team. Volunteer players from Red Lake Falls were used to strengthen weak points in the local formation. Narveson, with Jensen receiving, was in excellent form and had no trouble in "smoking" across his dark ones to the mistification of the visitors. Thru two errors by the locals, Thief River was enabled to put two men safely over home plate which were the only scores made by the visitors. St. Hilaire clouted Carlson's offerings almost at will and also tallied twice. The game remained a tie until the eighth inning when the winning score was put thru, making the tally 3 to 2 in favor of St. Hilaire. Except for the errors above mentioned, and eagerness on part of St. Hilaire to make three base runs from two base hits, the score should have been 5 to 0.

Dr. Owens of Red Lake, and Mr. Fox, manager of the Thief River team, acted as umpires.

Will Conduct Clinic

A throat and chest clinic will be held in the town hall of the city of St. Hilaire on Wednesday, June 29th, from 10:00 a. m. until 4:00 p. m. This clinic will be conducted by Dr. M. G. Milan Director of Oakland Park Sanitarium, aided by the county nurse. There are no charges made for examinations and it is an unrivalled opportunity for any one in poor health or in a run down condition to consult a specialist.

Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the Pennington County Produce Association will be held in the Farm Bureau office on Saturday afternoon at one p. m Officers will be elected for the ensuing year and plans outlined for carrying on the business for this year's potato crop. The acreage this year in Pennington county is almst double that of last year and all growers are very much interested in the marketing plans carried on by the produce association last year.

CROP PROSPECTS ARE EXCELLENT

Present Indications Are Good For Bumper Crop. Rye Doing Well.

Prospects for a good crop of all kinds of grain have not been so bright in this part of the county for many years. Unless something unforseen turns up later on, there is every indication of a bumper crop being harvested the coming fall. Continued cool weather during the first few weeks of the growing season gave the grain a chance to stool nicely and it appears more sturdy than usual.

Rye is doing exceptionally well. Some excellent fields were noted this week out on the ridges west of town and in the district around Wylie. Corn is coming along in good shape and promises to be a good crop this year. There are, of course, fields where sow thistle has the upper hand but these are not great in proportion to those that have fine stands of grain.

Seeding buckwheat on late plowing in thistle infested fields is being experimented with as a method of eradicating the thistle and in some places very good success has been achieved by that method.

Short Lived Liberty

Carl Knutson, held at the Crookston jail on a charge of murdering his wife about a month ago, made a break for liberty Saturday while his brother and sister were visiting with him in the corridor of the jail. Hundreds of men from Crookston and vicinity joined in the manhunt, and Knutson was recaptured east of Crookston just twenty four hours after his escape.

Defeat Grygla

Owing to the Middle River ball team backing out from their scheduled game here last Sunday, the team at Grygla were prevailed upon to come and fill the date. The Grygla lads had a good battery but their infield and outfield was weak in spots. First of the game was as neat an exhibition as one might wish for, but the last was pretty much in favor of St. Hilaire all through and they won handily. The Grygla boys are a good bunch of sports however, and they are welcome here any time regardless of who may win.

Township Meetings

Township unit meetings will be held at the following places this week: Star, District 59 on Thursday at 3:00 p. m. to discuss the eradication of grasshoppers in that section which threaten to be a serious pest if not taken care of very soon. The farmers in that locality will be shown how to make and mix the mixture and how to apply it on the fields so as to give the best results. This work is very important as the 'hoppers have seriously damaged a field in a few days if not poisoned.

A meeting will be held in Smiley Saturday evening at 8:00 o'clock, in the Lewis Nelson school house. It is expected that a large crowd will be present.

The Rocksbury township unit will hold their regular monthly meeting in Valhall Hall July 2nd, at 8:00 o'clock p. m.

Road Finished

The new state road grade north of Oklee and connecting with the state road on the town line just north of here, was finished recently. This road will make quite a cut-off for anyone traveling from here to points on the Jefferson highway below Oklee.

From Montana

Carl Simonson, who is now located at Malta, Mont., was here last Friday for a brief visit with friends. He came earlier in the week to visit at the home of his sister, Mrs. M. Gjerde, at Thief River.

No Club Meetings

There will be no meetings of the Community Club during the summer months as the school building is closed during that period. Ample notice will be given when meetings will be held again.

Mrs. W. P. Wilson received the sad tidings yesterday morning that her youngest brother, W. S. Brown, had passed away at his home at Lake City. Mrs Wilson left yesterday to be present at the funeral.

There will be no services in the M. E. church next Sunday as repairs now being made will not be completed by that time.

Westphal--Pilley

Miss Viola Westphal, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Westphal, was united in marriage to Mr. Joseph Pilley of St. Cloud on Tuesday afternoon this week. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents west of this village. The young couple will make their home at St. Cloud where they will be at home to their friends after July fifteenth.

Many friends in this vicinity join in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Pilley a long and happy married life.

DONATION SALE A SUCCESS

Rain Reduces Attendance Some. Total Of Sale, $4,454.50.

The donation live stock sale held at Crookston proved to be a success in spite of rain which greatly reduced the attendance as it prevented the use of autos. The picnic was not held. The total of the sale is $4,454.50. The pavilion building fund will receive this amount less the expenses of the sale which were kept down to a minimum thru donations of services, publicity, etc. The live stock association extends thanks for the donation of pure bred stock and the assistance which was given. The keen interest taken in the Red River Valley Live Stock association is a matter of gratification to all in this section of the state who recognize the great work that is being done to make the Red River Valley excel in live stock as well as in growing the best wheat, the finest potatoes and other crops.

Ban Mud Lugs

A report that threshing machine engines will be barred from trunk highways unless the engines have smooth wheels, is without foundation, says the highway department. Heavy mud lugs come under the ban as they will make unnecessary and unsightly tears in the roads. The highways are built for the use of farmersa and threshers equally as much as for any other class and they are entitled to use them, but all will be asked to exercise precaution and good judgement, especially in moving heavy machinery that might damage the roads if moved carelessly.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Crown were at Thief River Tuesday afternoon.

CLUB PICNIC IS GREAT SUCCESS

Ideal Weather For First Community Club Picnic Held Thursday.

The first annual picnic of the St. Hilaire Community Club, held at the Benson picnic grounds last Thursday, was a decided success in every detail. The day was an ideal one for an occasion of that nature, and this together with the community spirit of the people, were the causes attributing to its big success. A good program of various kinds of sports and contests was pulled off at noon on the lots across from the grounds.

During the noon hour the multitude of people took advantage of the various sales stands to satisfy their appetites. At about 2:30 o'clock, C. G. Selivg of Crookston delivered the address of the day,—one which was unexcelled in its text and delivery, and one which was of interest to every one present. After the speaking, the crowd availed themsevles of the opportunity of witnessing the fast base ball game between St. Hilaire and the semi-professional team of Thief River Falls which ended in the defeat of the latter. This event was the last number on the program and thereupon the people departed for their homes, unanimous in their sentiment that it marked the close of a perfect day.

A great deal of credit is due the club officers and the various committees for ther efforts in making the day such a success. The club is already demonstrating its value to the community it represents and is enjoying a rapidly-growing membership and is receiving much favorable comment.

Speed Fiend Cure

A plan has been suggested to the state highway department to adopt "road bumps at intervals sufficient to throw out occupants of cars running 45 miles an hour or more, but which would be hardly perceptable at 25 or 30 miles an hour" in order to curb speeders who endanger life of others on highways of the state.

Cleaning concrete crossings in this village so as to bring them slightly below higway level would have a tendency to put a damper on some of the speed maniacs who seem to think the highway is a race course made for their special benefit.

SEA GULLS FEAST ON PUTTY.

"The sea gulls of this section have such a broad taste that it is necessary to fasten the windows of many of our ferryboats and buildings with strips of metal instead of putty, the last-named commodity proving an irresistible delicacy to these sea fowl."

This announcement came in the mail of C. M. Andrews, district freight agent of the Southern Pacific railway in Seattle, from his San Francisco headquarters recently. The news was circulated along the water front by shippers and in a few hours the sea gull hankering for a putty dessert after a feast of ship's table scraps was magnified into a potent menace. In near-beer bars and other such places of congregation for sailors the putty gull assumed nature-faking proportions.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

TORONTO'S DISTINCTION.

Toronto is called a city of churches and big enough to become a member of the major league baseball family. It also has another distinction—that of leading all other Canadian cities in automobile registrations. Recently compiled statistics show the ten leading automobile cities of our neighbor to be as follows: Toronto, 32,334; Vancouver, 15,000; Montreal, 13,500; Winnipeg, 10,663; Hamilton, 6,714; Ottawa, 3,906; Quebec, 2,028; London, 3,569; Regina, 3,088, and Windsor, 3,132.

Several years ago my small son and I were visiting in the Ozarks. The child's grandmother gave him a beautiful white bantam rooster and hen to take home. We traveled in a chair car and I put the tiny chicks in a paper box and put the box on the car floor, thinking it would be safe for the night. I forgot all about the possibility of the rooster crowing. Early in the morning that little bantam started in, long and loud. I have never tried since to transport live stock.—Exchange.

FURNITURE BUILT TO LAST

Constructed of Concrete, It Can Defy Even the Abnormally Destructive Small Boy.

Furniture manufacturers say that it is hard for them to get enough of the various woods needed in their business. They have been reduced to veneers about as thin as a coat of varnish for some of the old favorites. The solid stuff is rare. In the search for substitutes they took to pouring concrete ships in place of wood and steel vessels. Now that they are pouring blocks of concrete homes for tenements and concrete cottages for our toilers they may as well pour concrete furniture at the same time. A stone dining-room table surrounded by a group of immovable and honbustable concrete chairs would be possible and comparatively cheap. Nowadays a mahogany davenport may cost $1,000 or less, but when a contractor is putting in a fireplace he might as well pour a concrete davenport to face it. It would be durable and could be made quite comfortable with a stack of feather beds. If a house were fairly stocked up with this concrete furniture there would be no danger of burglars backing in with a moving van and carting the stuff off in the absence of the owner.

Find Many Uses for Borax.

Borax as a solvent for shellac finds extensive application in the hat trade. In tanning, both borax and boric acid are used for cleaning the hides and dressing the leather. In the textile industry borax assists in dyeing, and in some parts of the world boric acid is still employed in the preservation of foods. It is permitted in the salting of fish because such foods are soaked in water before cooking and most of the boric acid is employed for external washes and it finds a place in cosmetics. It is used as a larvacide where it is recommended for the destruction of fly larvae in manures for it destroys the larvae without affecting the bacteria which increases the fertilizer value of the manure. Finally, borax is a well-known flux used in metal working.

Not So Crazy for Gold.

Men are fighting, rather easily today, but not over gold. We can conceive of no such wars or transfers of territory as occurred in South Africa after the discovery of gold, when the quiet content of a grazing country was transformed into a densely populated and highly industrialized mining region—though oil might effect such wars and such transformations. It is even more difficult to imagine any such sudden migrations as the movement to California in 1849, when the Scylla of the 'round the Horn trip or the Charybdis of the transcontinental trek had to be faced; or the spectacle of 40,000 men and women facing the rigors of an arctic winter in order to be ready to enter the Klondike when the ice broke in the spring.

Certain Advantages of Partial Payment Investing

We do not know of any other partial payment plan for investing that equals ours in convenience, fairness and financial return to the investor.

An investor on our plan undertakes to purchase a definite number of shares of Northern States Power Preferred Stock at the rate of $5.00 (or more) per share per month. He obtains the stock for the same price as the cash investor. He makes a first payment and receives an ownership certificate upon which his subsequent payments are endorsed.

During the payment period each deposit as made earns interest for the investor at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the day it is paid in. When the payments are completed the ownership is exchanged for a permanent Preferred Stock certificate, paying a return (at the present price of the stock) of 8.4 per cent a year divided into four dividend checks, received every 90 days.

If an investor cannot or decides not to complete his payments, he has the privilege of withdrawing his funds in which case he receives them back in full with 8 per cent interest added for the time the Company has had use of his money. There is no forfeiture or loss.

The steady accumulation of wealth by means of this method will beat the Get Rich Quick schemes 999 times out of 1000.

An 8.4 per cent investment backed by an 11 years dividend record.

An "Ad" Almost Brought Disaster

By MURIEL BLAIR.

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

John Benton rose hurriedly from the breakfast table and plunged for his hat; then he plunged for his wife. "Good-by, dearest," he said, clasping her as tightly as he could, considering that he was holding a derby and a bag full of office papers. "I must catch that 8:27."

"Good-by, John," said Mary Benton, kissing him fondly. "I do wish you didn't have to hurry away to that old office," she added, pouting.

"It won't be for long," said her husband. "If our great new advertising scheme goes through we'll flood the country with notices of our new patent. Everybody will read them. It's my own idea. Can't stop to tell you now. Good-by." And, with a hurried final kiss, he was through the door and hastening toward the station.

Mary sighed a little—then smiled. She and John had been married only six months and they were very fond of each other.

She put away the breakfast things; then, still smiling at the thought of her husband's haste, she went into the little room in which he worked at nights upon the new advertising plan. A piece of paper lay in one corner; it had evidently fluttered out of his desk and fallen there, unnoticed. She picked it up and, glancing at it, felt her heart throb painfully. She could hardly read the words that danced before her eyes.

It was a love letter, and it began: "My dearest, sweetest Jack." It was typewritten—evidently that the writer might remain immune against discovery, and for the same reason it was signed "Bunny." And it was just the sort of foolish mixture of prattle and endearment that an ignorant young girl would write.

Worst of all, it was headed 2247 Andover street—her husband's business address.

She tried to read it, but the mixture of shop talk and loving phrases was too nauseating. Mingled with allusions to business affairs were references to somebody who must be "kept in the dark"—herself, doubtless. And "Jack" had taken her out to dinner on the 29th—that was the evening when he did not come home till eleven. "Jack" had given her a ring. "Jack" was her everlasting swetheart.

Mary Benton had the quick temper which accompanies many lovable natures. She flung the letter into a corner and packed her bag. She was determined to go home to her mother. She would leave no message—merely the letter on the table. She picked it up and smoothed out the wrinkles. Then, at the door, she reflected. No, she would go down to the office and confront them—John and his absurd stenographer. Then at last she composed herself, dabbed some cologne upon her eyes, put the letter in her bag and started downtown. She would be very quiet and very calm and give the woman no occasion to triumph over her. She would request a few moments of John's time, would walk in, lay down the letter, ask him if he had anything to say, and then go home. She would never return—never. By this time she had begun to cry again.

She went down on a car and entered the dreary office building. When she went in she saw the same office boy and bookkeeper; but there was a new stenographer, a little, fluffy-haired thing, who chewed gum brazenly. Her heart sank. Was it possible that John was attracted by that creature?

"Why, Mary!" John was at the door, looking at her with a puzzled expression. He was holding her hands. "Mary! What's wrong, dear?"

She could not help her tears. "Send that—woman away," she said in a faltering voice, and the stenographer withdrew softly, smiling a little. She had seen men's wives go to their husband's offices before. Mary Benton entered, put down her bag and, standing like a recording angel, flung down the letter silently. John Benton read it and suddenly began to laugh uproariously.

"John! You are laughing!" exclaimed his wife.

"Read it aloud, my dear," her husband answered. "So you thought—you thought—"

"John, what do you mean? Can you offer any excuse at all? What is it?"

John Benton read solemnly:

"My dearest, sweetest Jack—When are you going to take me out to dinner again, as you did on the 29th, sweetheart? I miss you every hour of the day—more than I miss Hairoff, the new patent scissors for cutting your own hair. When I see my brother's Hairoff I think of your own dark, lustrous locks. I—"

"Oh, pshaw!" said John, throwing the letter down. That's a mimeographed circular, Mary; we're flooding the country with them. Everybody will read them and want a pair. Look at those stacks of letters up there, dearest—they're all the same letter, all those thousands of them. And you thought—you really thought—"

But Mary was past thinking now; she was in his arms, and her tears were those of relief, happiness and humiliation.

A Sad Reflection.

"I want to see some mirrors."

"Hand mirrors?"

LIVE STOCK NEWS

IMPORTANCE OF BEST STOCK

Good Care and Right Kind of Feed Are Best Means of Preventing Undersized Animals.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The importance of good breeding in the growth of live stock, and especially in the prevention of runts, is illustrated by the experience of an Indiana swine grower. "I started with stock," he remarks in a letter to the United States Department of Agriculture "direct from the foundation stock of the breed, and the results were satisfactory. When I had time to read of the work of other men, the results of feed composition and experimental feed trials, I took from these experiences what I thought practical for me to follow, and the results, though not exceptional, have been the natural results of good blood and good feed. One of my boars, farrowed in April several years ago, weighed 165 pounds the following September. At sixteen months he weighed 606 pounds, at twenty-eight months 850 pounds, and the following fall 1,015 pounds. This boar was one in a lot of 15, as uniform a bunch as I ever saw. Others grew into 600 and 800 pound hogs under farmers' care."

"In addition to good lines," he adds, "care and the right kind of feed are important means of preventing undersized animals, but the most important of all is the man with the feed basket, for it is 'the eye of the master that fatteneth his cattle.' So far as runts are concerned, I have never found it profitable to raise them under any treatment. I have seen lots of 'before and after taking' illustrations on paper, but not in the feed lot."

SCRUB PIGS ARE EXPENSIVE

Virginia Farmer Finally Convinced That Purebreds Are Most Profitable Animals.

The county agent of Page county, Virginia, tried last summer to persuade a farmer in his territory to keep purebred hogs. The man was difficult to convince. At the time of the argument the boys' pig-club contest for the year was just starting. Despite the arguments which the county agent made in favor of purebred stock, the man went ahead and bought four scrub pigs, saying he did not think the boys' club would do any better than those he had purchased. He bought his pigs a month after the club contest started, and gave them the best of attention. He butchered his hogs in January, this year, and the largest weighed 175 pounds gross. The prize winner in the pig club weighed 330 pounds, and was fed only a little over five months. This farmer is now trying to buy some purebred hogs, and declares his scrubs cost him more than twice the amount the meat they produced would have cost him.

BEST FOR FATTENING STEERS

Feed Daily an Average of Fifty Pounds of Silage, Some Oil Meal and Clover Hay.

One of the cheapest and best rations for fattening steers is an average daily of 50 pounds of silage, two or three pounds of oil meal and two or three pounds of clover hay. With corn as cheap as it is in most localities it is a good plan to add to this ration during the last two months of the feeding period an ever-increasing amount of corn.

EARLY SHEARING IS FAVORED

Lambs Thrive Better if Mother Is Not Compelled to Suffer From Carrying Heavy Coat of Wool.

Practice early shearing. Sheep shorn early will thrive better and the lambs will also do better if the mother is not compelled to suffer from carrying a heavy coat of wool in hot weather. There is but little gain in the weight of the wool after the weather gets warm, not enough to make it worth while to leave it on, when the comfort of the animal is considered.

CARE FOR FATTENING LAMBS

Give an Abundance of Succulent Forage Supplemented With Different Kinds of Grain.

Special care should be given the fattening lambs as soon as they are weaned. Abundance of succulent forage supplemented with grain foods that can mostly be grown on the farm, with the addition of a small amount of wheat bran and oil meal, [illegible]

NOT BED OF OCEAN.

Because of the great accumulation of sand in the desert, there is a popular idea that it must have been at one time the site of the sea, but this is not the case. It is certain, high authorities contend, that the sands of all the great deserts have been formed on the spot by the disintegration of the solid rocks on which they rest. Desert sands correspond in all respects so far as their mode of origin is concerned, to the dust and sand that accumulates on our high roads in the summer. All deserts are situated where the winds from the ocean, before reaching them, are exhausted of their moisture by passing over the mountains or across extensive tracts of land.

DRAINAGE BOARD EXPLAINS PLANS

Secretary Issues Circular Regarding Projects Now Before The Board.

The following circular letter issued to newspapers of the territory comprising the Red Lake Conservancy District by Secretary A. O. Brevik of the Board, explains the work that has been done, and also gives an outline of future plans:

Several inquiries regarding the projects before the Red Lake Drainage and Conservancy Board have been brought to the attention of A. O. Brevik, St Hilaire, the board's secretary, for reply. As there is general public interest in the matter he has summarized the information in the following statement.

The only projects handled by the board are the Red Lake river deepening (including the inlets at upper Red Lake), the Clearwater river outlet, the Crookston dyke and a small outlet project in the Grand Marias basin. These are the only projects that are before this board. Projects are accepted only after petitions are filed. Surveying work follows. After surveys are made palns and estimates go before the district court for final hearing. This outlines the necessary steps briefly.

The Thief River project affecting eastern Marshall county and western Beltrami county was started in judicial ditch proceeding several months before the Red Lake Drainage Board came into existence and is therefore a judicial ditch project and not a drainage board project. The surveys were made by Joseph Baugh as engineer while the Red Lake drainage board's surveys are being made by George W. Walker as engineer. The merits of the Thief River project have not been passed on by the drainage board as it was felt that the matter was not within its jurisdiction. At a mass meeting held two years ago this month in Thief River Falls over one hundred farmers from the territory using the Thief River as an outlet were present and almost begged that something be done to relieve conditions there. The Thief River deepening project and the diagonal ditch were planned under the judicial act as stated before.

According to Mr. Brevik work is progressing very fast on the Red Lake and Clearwater projects, final plans for which are being prepared by Engineer Walker in cooperation with F. V. Willard, state commissioner of drainage. Final hearings on these projects will be held as soon as final plans have been perfected.

This week on Tuesday he showed up for a short time and then hiked for Minto, presumably, and yesterday his wife was here to get her clothes and it seemed to be a "fare-you-well, Oslo." Anyhow if he will straighten up some of his checks he passed during his stay with us, it will be relief to several who are holders of checks bearing his signature.—Oslo Tribune.

FRANCE GOT REAL BARGAIN

Country Obtained Famous Statue of the Venus de Milo at a Cost of Only $150.

France, in preparing to celebrate the centenary of the presentation of the Venus de Milo to the Louvre, recites a version of the discovery in curious conflict with the story told in the latest collection of data in "A Century of Archeological Discoveries."

"As far as human evidence can now take us the immortal statue was found in 1820 in several pieces by a peasant of Melos. French officers were told of the find, examined it, and reported the matter to Brest. Brest told Smyrna, Smyrna told Constantinople, and the French ambassador there offered to buy the statue.

A Greek priest, however, had already bought it from the commune of Melos, but being hard up, had not paid the cash. A messenger from the French legation thereupon tempted the commune with 750 francs ($150), and carried off Aphrodite.

The angry priest protested, and the commune was fined by the sultan 7,000 piastres, afterward reduced on the appeal of the conscience-stricken French ambassador at Constantinople.

Old Korean Legend.

The Koreans explain the reason why sparrows hop on both feet instead of putting one before the other, and the reason why flies run their feet together when they alight, in the following way: The sparrow and flies had a quarrel and decided to ask the governor of the Korean provinces to arbitrate the matter. He found them both wrong and gave orders to have them both whipped, and it made the sparrows jump up and down with pain, and the flies put their hands together and prayed to be forgiven. The governor forgave them both, but as a sign he decreed that sparrows should always hop and that flies should rub their feet together when they alighted.

When You Whirl.

As things appear to be going around in a circle when we are dizzy—our common sense tells us that they must be stationary—it would seem that the fault lies in, or near, the ear—an organ which apparently has nothing to do with sight or feeling. Close to the ear is located the little organ which gives us our power of balance, permits us to walk upright without tottering, and, when properly trained, to assume postures which are distinctly outside the regular routine of our daily lives. Eccentric dancers, acrobats, athletes, and others have unconsciously trained this "balance wheel" until they can do strange things without, as we say, losing balance.

SOUNDPROOFING PAYS

Soundproofing a large Chicago office by means of felt panels for walls and ceilings is stated to have effected a real transformation. The din of the typewriters is subdued by the suppression of echoes, with greatly lessened nerve fatigue and increased efficiency, and the sound of the voice seems to be intensified within a few feet, making conversation easy. A signal bell in the room has taken on a curiously muffled tone, as though wrapped in cotton.

YOUR HOSE MILEAGE

Girls! What mileage does your hose yield on the waxed floor of your favorite dancing palace?

Fifteen miles on one pair of ordinary silk hose is the record established by Mrs. Laura Phelan, former instructor in dancing for the Detroit recreation commission.

She has figured it all out—how many steps she takes during an ordinary dance, and the length of each step.

The average working girl who visits a public dance an evening or two a week dances three miles on each such occasion, Mrs. Phelan says. Figured on that basis, a girl can attend five dances with one pair of stockings.

If a dancer can get 15 miles out of a pair of stockings, the average woman should be able to walk 45 miles before they are worn out, Mrs. Phelan believes.

GOOD ROADS ARE NEARER--FORCES COMMENCE WORK

HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT WORKS FAST TO GIVE EARLY BENEFITS IN NEW PROGRAM.

In the big task of transferring Minnesota's good roads program from paper to the ground, Charles M. Babcock, state highway commissioner, and members of his staff are making rapid progress under a showing on official records made public this week.

Accomplishments during the past 60 day period are summarized as follows:

More than 85 per cent of the 7,000 mile system of trunk highways taken over by the state to be "improved and forever maintained."

Maintnance organization of more than 1,000 patrolmen and crews with 40 tractors and 125 trucks put on the job of making and keeping smooth the entire system under the $3,000,000 annual maintenance fund set aside to to spread benefits at once to every section.

Contracts made for more than $2,000,000 of new construction—mainly grading and gravel surfacing—on surfacing—on trunk highways; calls to go out soon for bids on another $1,000,000 lot of projects and still others to follow.

Approximately $4,500,000 of county bond projects for trunk highway improvements approved under the state reimbursement plan and assistance given local road authorities charged with spending $12,500,000 this year on feeder roads.

"Minnesota road fund estimates this year are $26,833,000 from all sources," said Commissioner Babcock, "and the people are entitled to corresponding benefits on the highway sytem without unnecessary delay. It is to that end the highway department is working with all possible speed."

Less than 60 days have elapsed since Amendment No. 1 was made effective by the legislature and until that time there was neither authority nor money available to make even preliminary plans and surveys necessary in the development program. In spite of this big handicap, however, the department announced an organization of 1,500 members, including patrolmen in every section of the state and much new construction work begun by contractors as the summary shows.

Fund Division Explained.

The total of present season road funds is made up of $13,850,000 in round numbers of motor vehicle taxes federal aid and county bond money for trunk highway improvements and $12,500,000 of local taxes and state aid to be spent by county authorities exclusively on roads other than those in the trunk system. Without county bond funds in the future the trunk highway total is estimated at from $9,000,000 to $10,000,000 a year, federal aid continued, while funds for the local or farmers' roads will exceed $12,500,000 annually, bearing out the statement that the Babcock plan is first to provide a good road to every farm gate.

TRIP AROUND WORLD TIRES

Thirteen Americans Leave Ship at American Samoan Port.

Pago Pago, American Samoa.—Homesickness and the hard rule of the quarterdeck caused 13 Americans, who wanted to tour the world seeking adventures, to leave the yacht Wisdom II by the time she reached here recently from Los Angeles on a trip of scientific research around the globe.

"All Amerca wanted to go," Frederick O'Brien, author, one of the ship's company, said in telling of the requests made before sailing for berths on the boat. There were 20 officers, sailors and moving picture men aboard when the vessel left California. Six left at Tahiti and seven here, leaving what Mr. O'Brien called a workable crew of seven Americans. Six Tahitians were taken aboard as sailors.

The Wisdom, commanded by Capt. Edward S. Salisbury of New York and California, arrived here April 11. She left Los Angeles Jan. 19. On arriving here Capt. Salisbury entered the naval hospital for a few days.

The Marquesas Islands and points in Tahiti,, Bora Bora and Raiatea were visited before the boat arrived here.

O'Brien and Dr. Malcolm Douglas, New York, another of the ship's company, plan to leave the boat for a time, they said here, and visit the unique valley of Maloata in American Samoa. This place is known by the natives as the "haunted valley."

Seldom visited places like the New Hebrides, New Guinea and New Caledonia are to be visited by the Wisdom before she heads for the far east and India.

"Going Up."

"What's the matter, little girl?" asked a strager of a child he found weeping bitterly.

"I can't find my mamma."

"When you're out with your mother you should hang on to her skirts, then you wouldn't get lost."

"I'm too little, I can't reach them."

Encouraging Example.

"Will I find this a good place for my nerves?" asked the new guest at Holdup-by-the-Sea.

"Finest in the world," the manager assured him enthusiastically. "Why, look at me. When I opened up here three years ago I charged only $15 a week and now I have the nerve to shake you down for sixty."

CROP OUTLOOK IN NORTHWEST VERY PROMISING

REPORT SUBMITTED BY E. S. WILCOX CONCERNING CROPS IN THIS SECTION

Up to the minute crop report by E. S. Wilcox.

I arrived at Eckman, Bottineau county, N. Dak., afternoon of June 21, hired a car and drove over a good portion of the middle section of Bottineau county. On the morning of June 22 I drove thru the western part of Bottineau county. I found that fifty per cent of the cultivated land is in crops at this time. Wheat, oats, rye, corn and potatoes. I have been examining land in Bottineau county since July, 1904, and I never saw the crops look any better than they do at this time.

From Cardina in the southeastern part of Bottineau county, north and a little east to Bottineau, there are many grasshoppers, but the farmers seem to think there is so much green vegetation that they wouldn't harm the crop to any great extent. This is the only place where there seems to be any grasshoppers in Bottineau county. From Oemem east to Bisbee, across Rolette county, there are from 60 to 65 per cent of the cultivated ground in crops. The crops look very good. They are doing considerable summer fallowing in Rolette county. From Bisbee in Towner county to Conway in Walsh county, about 70 to 75 per cent of the cultivated ground is in crops. The grain stands from eight to ten inches high and from Conway to Ordock in Walsh county the wheat stands from 14 to 16 inches high and is just ready to shoot. From Ordock to Warren, Minnesota, it is 10 to 12 inches high. From Bisbee to Warren there was 70 to 75 per cent of the cultivated land in crops and the other 25 to 30 per cent is summer fallowed. Teams and tractors in the field all along the line doing summer fallowing.

In all my traveling thru Dakota these 16 years I have never seen the crops more uniform all th eway across the state for 260 miles as they are at this time. Dark green, very wide leaf on all grains. There is considerable winter rye and it looks very good. It looked to me as though the heads of the rye in Bottineau county were a little longer than they were farther east. There is plenty of moisture in the ground all the way across this 260 miles and I dug down in the ground several places in Bottineau county and I found the moisture had gone down from 14 to 18 inches deep.

I was in Roseau county,, Minnesota, at Roseau and Badger on the 16th and drove over a good portion of the county and the crops in this part looked the best they ever had since Roseau county was settled. Marshall county has a very good crop and the crops in Pennington county look very good.

Very truly yours,

E. S. Wilcox.

No man in the northwest has a better knowledge of the country and conditions than Mr. Wilcox. A crop report by him is highly reliable and valuable. This is a great year for the northwest. Business will be booming.

BREWERS FORM BIG BOOTLEGERS TRUST CHARGED

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE ATTORNEY SAYS BIG CITY FINANCIERS ARE INVOLVED.

Washington.—Charges that certain brewers and men prominent in big city financial affairs have organized a bootleggers' trust and had made law enforcement extremely difficult have been made before the house rules committee by Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the Anti-Saloon League of America.

Mr. Wheeler appeared in support of the requet of Chairman Volstead, of the judiciary committee, for a special rule to give his beer and prohibition tightening-up bill right of way in the house.

The leagues' attorney was not questioned about the alleged liquor trust and did not go into details.

Asked if it would not be possible to take out the beer section and pass it as a special bill, Mr. Wheeler insisted that it was just as important to include other sections designed to break up the indiscriminate traffic in intoxicants masquerading as medicine. cine.

Concerning his bill to prevent the sale of beer to the sick, Chairman Volstead declared immediate action was necessary to prevent the free flow of beer. He insisted that the anti-beer provision and other tightening-up features should be put thru.

Committeemen said they saw no need of emergency legislation because it related to the beer section. Mr. Volstead asked for a rule to prevent amendment to the bill in the house unless offered by himself on the ground that it would open the whole prohibition question and lead to weeks of wrangling.

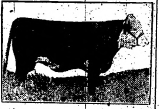
FARM STOCK

MILK ESSENTIAL FOR STOCK

While Good Pasture Is Important for Calves No Substitute Will Take Place of Milk.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"You cannot starve a young animal so as to check its growth, and still get good results." This comment by a Missouri farmer on the problem of preventing runtiness in live stock is in accord with the experiences of several hundred other live stock owners who have contributed their experience to the United States Department of Agriculture's study of this subject. "Starvation," he adds, "caused by the robbery of the weak by stronger animals, improper and unscientific feeding, indigestion caused by careless feeding, unclean troughs, pails, and swill barrels—all of these things cause much of the trouble in farmer's experiences, especially in their hog lots."



A Good Bull to Head the Herd.

In discussing the importance of milk as an essential food both for live stock and people, he remarks that while good pasture is very essential in the growth of calves, for veal calves no substitute will take the place of fresh cows' milk. "From my own experience," he states, "I know that no young animal will recover from retarded or stunted growth. As a child I was normal in size and my parents were of strong, sturdy, Scotch stock. When, some years ago, my parents settled as pioneers in Iowa, meat was a luxury, and milk and butter were unobtainable, at least for the first year. At the end of the year we got a cow and chickens, so our living conditions improved." He adds that malaria followed, and, although he outgrew the effects of the disease, he "never gained the physical strength, weight, or development of bone and muscle" that he should have had. "My normal weight," he says, "has been about 125 pounds, and still my health has been the best since I got the 'shakes.' Keep your young animals growing."

PRODUCTION OF GOOD HORSES

Increase in Number of Draft Animals Held to Be Great Need, Says Wayne Dinsmore.

Horse dealers feel that the horse is "coming back." According to information gathered by the Horse Association of America and transmitted to J. F. Kuehn of university farm, secretary of the Minnesota Horse Breeders' association, more draft horses are now being sold for city use than for many years past. Increased production of good horses is held to be a great need at present. Wayne Dinsmore, an authority well known in horse circles, says: "You can safely assure the farmers of a better market for their surplus animals."

HIGH SILLS CAUSE OF LOSS

Nebraska Breeder Finds That Little Pigs Are Unable to Follow Sows Into Pens.

Many pigs are lost and others are stunted in growth as the result of exposure because of high sills in front of hogpens. This is the observation of a Nebraska swine grower in a letter to the United States Department of Agriculture on the cause of runty live stock. He urges that stockmen examine their equipment, and be certain that small pigs are able to follow the sows into the pens. Attention to balanced rations, sanitation, and pure water are likewise mentioned as methods of preventing runts.

BENEFIT OF STABLE MANURE

It Should Be Balanced With Acid Phosphate, Which Is Comparatively Inexpensive.

Manure contains humus in plenty and all the necessary plant materials, as well as bacteria which put these materials into the most usable shape for crops. To get the full benefit of stable manure, however, it should be balanced with acid phosphate, which is comparatively inexpensive.

KEEPING HARNESS IN REPAIR

Neglect Results in Injury That Lessens Durability—Sew With Strong Linen Thread.

Neglect of harness results in injury that greatly lessens its durability. The sewing, which should have been done with strong waxed linen thread, must be kept in good condition. All buckles should remain solidly in place. It is advisable to wash and oil harness frequently.

BASED ON HIS OBSERVATION

Youngster Reasoned Probable Meaning of Word From What He Had Noticed in Life.

A local seventh-grade teacher has several suitors, who often come to the building to walk home with her, relates the Indianapolis News. The youngsters in her room, much interested in the performance, have watched closely the suitors and noticed that the one who drives a very "spiffy" red roadster is the most favored one. So they have drawn conclusions.

The other day she was teaching them the song, "A Man Who Would Woo a Fair Maid." In one place it said, "He must cajole her." The teacher stopped after that part and asked the meaning of cajole. But no one would answer. "Oh, you must know," she smiled at one of her brightest boys, "why, you never could be successful in this task of wooing unless you can cajole."

He was still mystified, but the little fellow behind him raised his hand. "Oh, I know, then," he burst out. "It's something about driving an automobile, isn't it?"

CITY'S MONEY WELL SPENT

Enormous Expenditures of the Country's Metropolis Held to Be Justified by the Results.

There are 227 cities of 30,000 population and more in the United States whose balance sheets are examined by the federal census bureau, and they owe net debts amounting to $2,679,551,000 or $77.82 a head. Of this aggregate indebtedness New York owes two-fifths, or $1,009,309,000.

This is a vast sum of money but it is the debt of a great, rich city, which is constantly growing greater and richer. Some of the money may have been wasted, but most of it was put into productive enterprises necessary to the public service, or into parks, boulevards, schoolhouses, fire departments and police department stations, bridges, railroads, water works; scores and hundreds of essentials for civilized urban life.

That New York owes such a large proportion of the aggregate city debt of the nation is not surprising. It has had to spend more money than other towns because its great population makes heavy expenditures impossible to avoid.—New York Herald.

MOTHER'S AGE, TOO.

When a child asks the librarian to select a book for some one else in his family, an older brother or sister, it is almost necessary to ask the youngster the age of the person for whom the book is to be chosen.

Irwin is a new borrower at the library. On his first trip to the library he was delegated to get a book for his mother and one for his sister.

"How old is your sister?" asked the assistant librarian.

"She is ten," replied the boy; and then, thinking he had better volunteer all necessary information, added:

"And my mother is thirty-seven years old."—Exchange.

YOUNG MAN IN A HURRY.

When I was a student at college in a small town it was my habit to wear a green eye shade while studying. One spring day I hurriedly left my room to go down town for a purchase. After having gone a couple of blocks I met a girl to whom I had been introduced a few days before. I started to lift my hat, only to find that instead of having my hat on, I was still wearing the eye shade.—Exchange.

BOTH HANDS WORKING.

Patsy, age two and a half, accepted a nickel from her grandfather and then backed away with the coin tightly held in her little hand. After looking at the coin a moment, she approached grandfather again and, holding forth her other palm, she inquired: "How about one for this hand?"

LOCAL ATMOSPHERE.

"Schoolin' has enabled our boy Josh to speak wonderful smooth and grammatical," remarked Mrs. Corntossel, proudly.

"Yes," replied her husband, "he'll have to stop it pretty soon and practice up on his old line of farm dialect so as to keep the summer boarders [illegible]"

RECALL FATE OF FRANKLIN

Interesting Relics Recently Brought to Vancouver From the Land Where He Perished.

After being in the possession of the thrifty natives of King William's land for three-quarters of a century, a large number of interesting relics of the ill-fated Sir John Franklin polar expedition have been brought from the frozen north by Joe Benard, who is here after a four years' stay along the northernmost coast of the North American continent, says a Vancouver (B. C.) dispatch.

Though priceless from a collector's point of view, the utilitarian value of the relics is negligible, and they were obtained by Benard for a piece of lumber worth possibly 20 cents on the coast.

A few brass buttons among the relics are believed to have belonged to the distinguished leader, though there is as yet no positive proof of this.

Benard also obtained a number of primitive scientific instruments used by the northern tribes. These will be sold to various museums and universities for which the explorer has been collecting ethnological specimens and data since 1910. He also brought a collection of furs worth approximately $25,000.

Sir John Franklin, with 154 companions, sailed into the Arctic in 1845 to find the northwest passage, and was never heard of again. After many relief expeditions had failed, his fate was ascertained in 1859, when bleached skeletons were found on the trail to Hudson bay.

The Middle Initial.

With the exception of William H. Taft, Senator Harding is the first President since Rutherford B. Hayes, to use more than one Christian name. Grover Cleveland, William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson (who dropped his first name Thomas, early in the career) got along without middle names or initials. The middle initial, incidentally, is almost exclusively an American characteristic. An Englishman may call himself John James Smith, but practically never John J. Smith. A Frenchman may be baptised Auguste Charles Jesus Marie Georges Dupont, but he will be known to the world as Georges Dupont, and probably will sign himself G. Dupont.

The use of more than one given name is puzzling to a Frenchman. When Senator Lodge is mentioned in the French press, he is never "M. Lodge," but "M. Cabot Lodge," or as one prominent Paris daily writes it, "M. Cabot-Lodge." The President-Elect may look forward to be known on the continent as "President Gamaliel Harding."—Editorial Digest.

CAT SCORED USUAL VICTORY

Japanese Legend Merely Another Feather in the Cap of the Ever-Conquering Feline.

There is an enchanting story told by the Lady Sei Shonagon, a beauty of Japan of nine centuries past, of the emperor's favorite cat — herself a spoiled beauty. She had received a cap of honor and had been raised to the third rank of nobility, with the title of Wiyobu-no-Ototo, or "Chief of the Female Attendants," and was a cat of many graces. Unfortunately, on a day of disobedience, her lady-in-waiting summoned the emperor's dog, Okinamaru, to startle her into good behavior. He barked obediently, and the cat dashed madly behind the screen, where his majesty sat at breakfast, and sought refuge in his arms. The emperor, much shocked, sent for the lord high chamberlain, and pronounced sentence on poor Okinamaru. A thrashing and exile! The Lady Sei describes him as hitherto a happy dog and much esteemed. But a short time before he had been carried in a procession in a willow litter, with peach blossoms and hollyhocks on his head! He was now an outcast on dog island, "and none so poor to do him reverence." He may possibly have found life easier without the hollyhocks, but it is interesting to see that the eternal cat is victorious as ever. The dog is vanquished; the lady-in-waiting ruined, and the cat lies in the emperor's lap and purrs. So was it always; so will it ever be, writes L. Adams Beck in Asia Magazine.

Isn't the Law Wonderful!

A Belgian paper tells of a woman living at Mons who is denied a marriage license because she does not know her name, age or birthplace and therefore "has no legal existence."

The case is analagous to that of a man named Mahony who was hanged some years ago. When the prison physician pronounced him dead, the body was cut down and delivered to the relatives. Life was not extinct, however, and a few hours later the man was quite himself again. He was shot by a murderer some time afterward, but the assassin could not be brought to justice because, as the court said, "Mahony was legally dead, and therefore could not be killed subsequently by anybody."

Reunited by Smith's Spite Fence.

By HAZEL BLAIR.

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

It certainly was a desirable property from every point of view, but one point of view was permanently included, and that was the outlook upon old Mr. Smith's garden. It was an enormous garden, almost big enough for the grounds of an institution, and from Mr. Smith's front gate Mrs. Harnack could see rows of magnificent elms and locust trees and flower beds which always seemed to bloom with seasonable flowers. But from her side windows she could see nothing.

"It's the spite fence," explained the agent. "That's why the property's so cheap. Mr. Smith resented the late owner's building next to him, and so he put it up."

So Mrs. Harnack bought the property. It was just the place, she told herself, for a widowed lady to settle down, and there was an excellent finishing school near by for Miriam, her only child. And days passed and weeks passed, but neither saw Mr. Smith.

One day the agent stopped her in the street.

"I hear you're going to have a neighbor," he said, grinning.

"What, somebody else going to build on the other side?" asked Adeline Harnack apprehensively.

"No, Mrs. Harnack," the agent answered. "Old Mr. Smith's nephew, John, is coming to live with him. Wonder what old man Smith will do with him."

"Teach him to be a fencemaker, I suppose," said Mrs. Harnack crossly.

Young John Smith was put into a lawyer's office in Cosset Town. One day, when Miriam had been home from school two weeks, Mrs. Harnack, walking with her, saw her daughter bow, and John Smith raised his hat as he passed on the opposite side of the road.

"How do you know him?" demanded the mother.

"Oh, I was introduced," answered her daughter evasively.

"Then understand, Miriam, I forbid you to speak to him again or notice him."

"Very well, mamma," answered the daughter submissively.

But on the next day carpenters arrived at Mr. Smith's house, and they proceeded to erect a rough scaffolding on the outside of the fence. And the next day painters mounted it, and before nightfall the exterior bore the sign, in huge letters of yellow and red:

"Try Pyramid Pills for That Tired Feeling."

Adelina Harnack was away that day in town. When she came back she saw the legend. She was furious.

"Miriam, I am going to stop this if it takes every penny I have," she said. "I am going straight down to Mr. Capel, the lawyer, to instruct him to get an injunction."

"But, mamma—"

"Now, not a word, Miriam!"

"All right, mamma, only John—I mean Mr. Smith—is working in Mr Capel's office."

The name betrayed the secret which the girl's tones concealed. Mrs. Harnack turned on her.

"Why do you call him John?" she asked icily. "Is it possible—possible—?" She looked at her daughter's scarlet face. "Miriam, has there been anything between you and that contemptible young man?"

Miriam began to cry. "I love John," she sobbed. "And he loves me, and he's coming to see you tomorrow afternoon."

"No, indeed," answered her mother. "I am going to see him, and his uncle, too, and tell them what I think of them."

Her anger was at the boiling point when she arrived at the front door. "Is Mr. Smith in?" she asked of the housekeeper.

"Mr. John Smith, or Mr. Johnathan Smith?" asked the woman curtly.

"Jonathan!" said Mrs. Harnack quietly, and the housekeepr thought it was the answer to her question. But Adelina Harnack merely repeated the name in wonder. Could there be two Jonathan Smiths or was it—?"

"Walk in, please," said the housekeeper, and a half minute later the visitor found herself in the presence of the recluse.

He had not changed so greatly. He was the same man whom she had once loved so passionately, save for the tale of years. And he knew her.

"Adelina!" he exclaimed, and stumbled forward. And Adelina Harnack somehow found herself in his arms, though it was 20 years since she had left them.

"It's really you, Adelina?" he asked incredulously. "Where do you live? How have you found me here?"

"I live next door," she answered.

"Next door?"

"Beyond the fence. Don't you remember that I wrote to you? Oh, but you didn't know my married name, did you? I want to tell you so much—but the shock has unnerved me."

He caught her in his arms again.

"It is you, then," he said. "I've held you in my heart and fenced you round about—and all the while I was fencing you out, unknowing it. But, Adelina—I shall keep you now—I—"

He paused. "We'll tear down the fence tomorrow," he said, "and then we can talk. Not tonight. Tonight [illegible] boy and girl together again. [illegible]"

ST. HILAIRE TRIMS FERTILE

The St. Hilaire ball team added another victory to their string when they met and defeated Fertile on the latter diamond on July fourth. Melquist, on the mound for St. Hilaire played a magnificent game, allowing but few hits and seemingly fanning the Fertile lads at will. Fertile got one score in the first part of the game which was the only one scored during the game. St. Hilaire connected with safe bingles in the sixth and seventh innings which netted them four scores. The locals played the original line-up with which they started out last spring, all being home boys, and they played an errorless game throuout.

Quite a number of fans from here went down with the team to spend the day and enjoy the hospitality for which Fertile is famous.

CROPS BENEFIT FROM RAIN

The dry, hot weather which had begun to tell on the grain crops in this locality, was terminated Saturday evening when a heavy rain fell. A strong wind accompanied the rain and some places large trees were broken off by the wind which amounted to almost a gale. Sunday, Monday and Tuesday brought other fine showers so there is plenty of moisture now for some time to come. Some rye on the ridges was burned out before rain came but most of the crop is in fairly good shape. Hay will be a good crop this year but the demand is light.

Y. W. C. A. SAFEGUARDS GIRLS

Fargo—Due to the recent tragedy in which Miss Marie Wick, 18, of Grygla, Minn., was assaulted and murdered at the Prescott hotel in Fargo, N. D., on the night of June 6, the Board of Directors of the Young Women's Christian Association feels the necessity of giving widespread publicity to the fact that the Young Women's Christian Association is an institution organized primarily to give protection to women and girls.

The Y. W. C. A. is not a money-making institution, neither does it compete with hotels, but its sole object for existing is to make life safer and happier for girls. Young women traveling alone or going to a city to find employment are urged to seek out the Y. W. C. A. in that city and make it their headquarters.

The Young Women's Christian Association stands for service to women, and is ever ready to help them in any way possible.

River Popular Place

The river below the old mill has been a popular place since the hot spell set in. Bathing at that place is excellent. A habit, especially among the younger boys, of going in without bathing suits, will be curbed, as a village ordinance prohibits anyone bathing anywhere in the river within the village limits unless they wear proper costume.

NO FARM BUREAU AID

The Pennington County board at a meeting held recently turned down the request for an appropriation of $2,000.00 per year for two years to pay for operating the farm bureau in this county. Shortage of funds is given as reason for action taken. In order to keep a county agent it will now be necessary to make up the amount needed by popular subscription.

Front Finished

Brick laying on the front and sides of the creamery was finished yesterday. All that remains now of this class of work is the chimney and rear wall. With favorable weather, the building will be entirely enclosed within another week.

How Cupid Foiled the Constable

By KATE EDMONDS.

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

A young man, well dressed and clever faced, coming rapidly down the principal street of Fairview, suddenly paused and stared ahead in a startled way. He had apparently observed some one he did not wish to meet, and he turned down a side lane at a brisk, excited walk.

"It's the constable, sure enough," he said under his breath, "and I feel pretty sure he must be looking for me." The speaker glanced apprehensively back the way he had come, and then broke into a run.

It was a singular position, that in which Cecil Morse found himself. Briefly stated, he was bent upon running away to get married. Others, including his legal guardian, Lawyer Grabbe, and his old maid daughter, Portia, and their hired emissary, the town constable, were set on nipping the golden progress of love's young dream in the bud.

Cecil was heir to a liberal fortune. He lived with the Grabbe family. The lawyer was intent on keeping a hold on his ward and his fortune as long as he could. Incidentally he plotted to enmesh the young man in the snares of the somewhat faded beauty of the classic Portia.

Now, Cecil had loved and won Claire Wyndham, who lived over in the next county. Her father was a tyrannical old fellow who had heard of the mutual attachment, thundered out that the lovers were too young to think of wedding bells, and had set his foot down—hard.

The result was a plot on the part of the lovers. The Wyndhams were going to take Claire to Europe the following week. In the meantime she had gained permission to visit a schoolgirl chum at Brookville. There Cecil had been the day previous. There, too, all the arrangements had been made for an elopement the next evening. Just now, Cecil had gone to a garage to secure the automobile he had engaged for the trip.

The auto man was his friend. He told Cecil that the constable had been there looking for him. The lawyer had got wind of Cecil's plan to leave town, and was bound to circumvent it.

"I'm your friend, Cecil," said the garage keeper, "so I warn you. They have the west turnpike guarded. The constable is looking for you with a warrant."

Cecil was a crack sprinter. His one thought was to get out of town. He would trust to luck for guidance, once clear of his pursuer. Turning into an open stretch he discovered half a mile away a high board fence.

"The very thing!" he cried exultingly, "if my friend, Bob Archer, is only on hand."

There had been an airplane meet at Fairview for several days. Inside the inclosure was Archer, who was an airship enthusiast. He and Cecil had become great friends. The runner shot a rapid glance behind him. Less than a quarter of a mile away the constable was hot on his trail.

"There is the Flyer," cheered Cecil, promptly making for a hangar beyond which a three-passenger biplane was getting ready for a flight. He recognized the machine belonging to Bob, and its owner near by. All out of breath, Cecil ran up to his friend.

"Bob," he panted, "I'm in trouble! Got to get away from Fairview."

"You don't say so!" exclaimed Archer. "Where to, may I ask?"

"Brookville, and quick. The constable is after me. Bob, it's about—what I hinted to you—the girl I love. They are trying to separate us."

"Jump in—the left seat back of the pilot post," directed the young airman. "Strap yourself in. Give her a run, boys," he directed to his assistants.

Chug—chug!—the aerial beauty sped over the grass for 30 feet. Bob shot on the power.

"Hold on, there! Stop that machine! In the name of the law—"

"The mischief!" gasped Cecil.

They were leaving the ground, but not alone. The official had fairly overtaken his prey. He had jumped at the machine and skimmed one of the wings. To prevent damage and save him from a fall, Bob was forced to grab the bulky officer and drag him into the vacant seat.

"Stop this machine!" flared the constable. "I've got a warrant—"

"Can't stop—got to finish this curve first. Here, Cecil, strap him in, if he doesn't want a tip."

"Oh, let me out—let me out!" pleaded the shivering official.

Once in the spectacular flight, Bob leaned toward Cecil and received detailed instructions. Then he volplaned, made a circuit, and the airplane landed in an open field near Brookville, easy and graceful as a bird sinking to its nest.

Cecil quickly removed his safety belt and sprang to the ground.

"Hold on, there!" shouted the constable. "I've got a warrant for that young man."

"No good in this district, officer," smiled Bob. "We've landed just over the county line."

Cecil Morse disappeared. He was to reappear at the Wyndham home two days later. The happy wedded pair had sent a honeymoon wire to Papa Wyndham, pathetically telling him how sorry, but still how happy they were. The reply telegram had conveyed to them the time-honored sentiment: "Come home and all will [illegible]

Gem Natural Thermometer.

It was a wonderful sapphire, so it is said, that led the celebrated Dr. Sorby to the discovery of the nature of the liquid sometimes found enclosed in the cavities of crystals. The gem in question contained a tube-shaped cavity a quarter of an inch long and an eighteenth of an inch in diameter, which was so regular in its bore that it served by means of the liquid partially filling it, for a thermometer. The contained liquid half filled the bore at 50 degrees Fahrenheit, and completely filled it at 80 degrees. A study of the rate of expansion of the liquid led to the conclusion that it must be carbonic acid.

Eve of First of May.

The eve of the first of May is known in German legend as Walpurgis night, the Detroit News recalls. Then witches and other workers of evil hold high revel and offer sacrifices to the devil as their lord and master. The scene of their festival in Germany is the Brocken, a famous peak in the Harz mountains, 3,745 feet high. This annual festival was, in the popular belief, conceded to them in recompense for the loss they sustained when by St. Walpurga the Saxons were persuaded to renounce paganism with its rites for Christianity. St. Walpurga was an English nun, who, in the middle of the Eighth century, went as a missionary to Germany. She was successful and was held in high honor by those she converted.

Dictators Out of Date.

If you're tempted to be a dictator, stand off somewhere and get a good square look at yourself. You might stand in the shadows on the corner, and let the fellows tell each other their opinion of you. It may not be exactly to your liking, but it may help you see what your rating is. Few people have enough of the all-wisdom to regulate the world. The best thing is for you to put your personal affairs in such shape that they will command the admiration of the community. Then folks will ask your advice and you can dictate so long as the advice you give is regarded by the other fellow as genuine service to him, but no longer.—Grit.

Varying Views of Marriage.

The definition of marriage has particularly appealed to humorists. Petit-Senn has summed it up thus: "Marriage is a port in the storm, but more often a storm in the port"; while Edmond About uses another and more violent metaphor. Says this gentleman: "Marriage is in life like a duel in the midst of battle." Beaumarchais, on the other hand, is milder, but equally as cynical. He remarks that "of all serious things marriage is the most ludicrous." Balzac, who really never married, but who had much to say on the subect, puts it in this terse manner: "Marriage is a fight to the death." La Rochefoucauld, the greatest of the French epigrammatists, compromises with the extremists and remarks: "There are good marriages, but there are no delicious ones." How different is this esthetic viewpoint to the petulant observation of Sulpice Guillaume Gavarni, who says: "When a man says he has a wife, it means that a wife has him."

GIVES GOOD SUGGESTION

A reader outlined to us the other day, a simple manner of disposing of slops and other forms of garbage such as usully accumulates in the ordinary household. It was to take an old boiler or similar receptacle with tight fitting cover, and punch the bottom full of holes. Bury the container so the top is level with the ground. Liquids poured into this receptacle will drain away into the earth leaving only the solids. The latter can be taken out when necessary with an ordinary fork or shovel and buried nearby.

This method, especially if a little chlorate of lime is used, eliminates bad odors, and prevents flies from breeding in the garbage. This seems to be a sort of surface septic tank proposition, and as the cost is nothing to speak of, it should be tried out by those who have difficulty in disposing of their garbage in a satisfactory manner.

LONDON KIDDIES USE MUSEUM

Children Not Only See Interesting Things but Also Learn Useful Arts.

London.—Museums in the great American cities might well follow the example set by those in London, which on every school holiday or vacation are filled with children from the homes of the poor in the neighborhood.

But it must be said that at this season the children are attracted to the museums quite as much by the warmth of the galleries as by the treasures they contain.

It is in South Kensington museum that these children enjoy themselves most, for not only is there a room where the things that chiefly interest them are assembled and an official children's guide to explain them, but at every holiday season classes are formed.

If a child is found, like the small boy of 7 who was making a charcoal drawing of Rodin's "St John"—though this was an exceptionally ambitious attempt—there are drawing teachers who will help him.

Other teachers give up their holidays to teach small fingers to do art needlework or to stencil or to paint designs.

Too Many Larks.

Corpus Christi, Tex.—"Oh, listen to the lark," is not a popular refrain in south Texas this year. There are more larks in this district of the state than for many years, farmers say, and they are descending upon the cornfields in such numbers that the grain is being pulled up almost as rapidly as it can sprout.

The high cost of ammunition is the chief protection enjoyed by the birds the farmers say, but some of them are adopting an ingenious method of poisoning. Oats are sprouted, and soaked in poison and then scattered over the field intended to be protected.

Sounds That Bounce.

Like light, sound is formed by a vibration or a moving of the atmosphere. These sound waves travel through the air precisely as water waves travel through the sea, or as ripples are formed when one casts a pebble into a pond. Ripples of water are thrown back when they reach the edge of the pond, but owing to the loss of momentum the return wave is usually less noticeable than the original one. The air, however, being more resilient than water, bounces back when one of the sound waves strikes an obstruction, and eventually returns to its original source—the force of the return being largely dependent upon the nature of the obstruction and the atmospheric conditions prevailing at the time. It is this return of the sound waves that [illegible] an echo.

Doing Proper Thing.

We may not believe in a personal devil, but there are very few people so constituted that they are able to do the proper thing continually and everlastingly without constant pressure from conscience, Dame Grundy, and fear of what the neighbors will say. Our entire inclination is in the direction of a passive rather than an active existence, except for the purely routine muscular movements, the will is constantly engaged in taking the body by the nape of the neck and casting it afresh into the fray. The backbone may be a hard-working organ, and always on the job, but in comparison to the effort put forth daily by the will, is merely an also ran.—Exchange.

Tackling Big Problems.

You never can measure up to a big problem as long as your mind's on yourself. The very bigness of great challenges reveals the caliber of men. The small chap is so overwhelmed that he loses his self-control and ability to do. The big man is steadied when confronted with tasks beyond the average. He knows that more than the usual strength and wisdom is needed and steadies himself for the task. He is none the less conscious of the tremendous interests at stake because he does not tremble. In fact, he may be all aquiver inside, but being master of himself he conceals how keenly he feels the situation.

Benefit of Censorship.

"Do you approve of censorship for the theater?" "Yes," replied the manager; "but only for foreign countries. You can always expect good business for a play whose production has been forbidden abroad."

How the Trapper Won His Bride

By FREDERICK CLARKE

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Will you remember me when I am gone, Leona? Tell me!" The tone was masterful.

"Perhaps."

The man gave a sharp exclamation, and catching the girl by the wrist he said sternly:

"Don't speak that way. When you do it cuts like a knife," and his other hand fell half-unconsciously upon the hilt of the hunting knife in his belt.

"How dare you? You know, Jean Lemare, I have never told any man that I love him."

"Actions speak louder than words," the man returned coldly. "Those glorious eyes of yours say yes when your lips form no. You have listened to my words of love and never turned away."

"They interested me as long as they were different," the girl returned, maddeningly.

"When you have something new to say, expect me to remember you; but until then I do not care to even listen," and the trapper was left alone with his rage and love. Until his departure on the following day the spoiled beauty kept out of his way, and once he had disappeared, she drew a deep sigh of relief.

Smiling a little to herself, and yet wondering if he would study something new to say to her when he emerged from the dangers of the unbroken path into the wilderness, she hummed a song he favored, and was so wrapped up in her own thoughts she did not hear the stealthy step of a man who stole upon her. Small wonder that she did not, for he was skilled in tracking down the wildest kind of game, and hiding his presence from the keen-scented, wild, things of the unexplored North. The first that she realized that she was not alone was when Leona felt a man's arms about her, and a man's mouth pressed to hers; and frightened almost to death she looked up into Jean's dark, flashing eyes.

"You told me to make love differently," he said, after he had kissed her breathless, "and so I have. I knew no other man had ever held you in his arms or taken kisses from your lips. Now I have put my stamp on you."

With a heavy sigh, and yet with the light of hopeful love in his face, Jean retraced his steps, and this time fairly began his long journey. For weeks afterward, Leona felt her cheeks burn crimson at the very thought of Jean's kisses, and yet in her heart she was not angry, for she did love him, though her untamed girlish nature rebelled at restraint. As the days crept on, she took pleasure in the thought that she belonged to this mighty hunter, and she began to plan her future as his wife. Suddenly her happiness was crushed as the tender verdure beneath the branches of the felled forest tree. After a day that had seemed unusually long to her impatience, although one of the shortest of the year, she was sitting in the chimney corner idly listening to her father, when some of his words recalled her to attention.

"I didn't think that of Jean. He ought to be ashamed of such a thing."

"What?" Leona asked.

"Marrying an Indian girl," was the careless answer.

"He never did!" she said fiercely, her eyes blazing in the firelight.

For a week she lay ill, and when she finally crawled forth into the open air she loved so well, she was like one smitten. All her proud, young courage was gone. She shunned the trappers who flocked to her father's store, and spent her time out in the woods where Jean had kissed her maiden lips and held her in his strong arms. Into this retreat no one dared penetrate, not even Long John Hathers. He would not give up the secret hope in his heart, and tried to court her, although he said but little. His eyes glowed a red fire that nothing extinguished. Leona at first scarcely noticed him, then hated him for the love she saw he bore her, and prevented him from speaking of it until one day when the sun was beginning to feel warm, and she was once more in the woods. Believing herself entirely alone, she began to live over once more the love scene of the fall before, when suddenly Long John stood before her, speaking madly of his love, and pleading madly with her to return it.

The girl fought like a young tiger. She knew now that he had been a witness to her last scene with Jean, and it drove her mad with rage. Finally, seeing the hateful, bearded face coming nearer and nearer, she cried aloud for help, and in providential answer to her cry it came, for suddenly Long John measured his length on the grass, and she saw Jean like one in a dream.

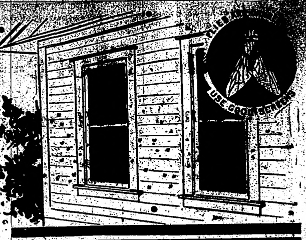
"Come, Leona, sweetheart," Jean said tenderly, "give me the welcome back I deserve," and he held out his arms.

"How dare you?" she gasped. "What will your wife think when I tell her?"

"What about the Indian girl?" she continued, for the man looked puzzled.

"Indian girl? Oh, you mean the one I found and took to the mission. Why, dear, she is only eleven."

Leona gave a gasp of happiness and Long John [illegible] to his feet, once more [illegible] in Jean's arms, but this time she went of her own accord.



Flies Are More Dangerous Than You Think!

FLIES breed so fast it is difficult to stamp them out. But, at least, we can keep them out of our houses. And we ought to keep them out—not only for our comfort, but for our health. Many people don't realize what great disease-carriers flies are. They often come laden with disease germs directly to our food. Screen the house and porches well and you prevent disease. Also you add to your comfort and peace of mind.

It does not cost much to screen a house.

TOUR IS CUT TO TWO DAYS

Change Necessary To Accommodate State Dept. Representatives.

The tour to be made over the northern part of the valley under the auspices of the Minnesota Red River Valley Development Association, the first of what is planned to be an annual event, will be limited to two days duration, instead of three as originally planned. The change was made necessary to accommodate representives of state departments who are expected to accompany the tour.

The start will be made from Crookston following the arrival of the train from the twin cities the morning of the 28th, and will terminate at Warren the evening of the 29th. Plans will be made to hold the closing meeting at Warren early enough to permit the state officials to take the evening train for the eastern part of the state.

Drainage, flood control, road making, fire pevention, land settlement, weed and rust eradication will be among the subjects that will receive attention as the tour progresses. No effort will be made to feature attention upon any one subject to the extent of effecting action at the time of the tour, but suggestions and recommedations will be invited and gone over by a specially organized committee enroute and presented at the final meeting at Warren.

A number of towns have alreday reported to Secretary C. H. Zealand that they would make additions to the tour. A definite time schedule will be laid out and every effort will be made to strictly adhere to it so that where group meetings are arranged there need be no time wasted either by the local people attending, or the tour party. Announcement of the schedule will be made by a special committee named by President Mathwig during the present week.

McCann was elected to represent the association at the state meeting to be held at the West Hotel at Minneapolis on July 11th. Each member gave an estimate as to the number of bushels he would have in this year's crop and the amount of sacks needed for the marketing of the potatoes. The association recognizing the value of the Farm Bureau in assisting production and marketing during the past year contributed a sum of $100.00 for the maintainance of the farm bureau organization with the statement that more would be given if necessary. This association is one of the rapidly progressing organizations of the state as is shown by the statement of the business done during the past year. YOUTH KNEW HUMAN NATURE

His Answer to Moral Question Marked Him as One Singled Out for Future Greatness.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, the famous educationalist, said at a dinner in Brooklyn:

"People talk a lot of nonsense about telling character by the walk, by the handwriting and so on. Now, there's one way you can really tell character, and that is by putting moral questions to school children.

"I remember a schoolboy who answered one of these moral questions, back in 1880, in such a manner as to convince me that he would become a realistic novelist. Well, that boy is a realistic novelist, and a good one, today.

"The moral question put to his mates and to him was this:

"'If a boy sold a pair of broken skates, and he knew they were broken while the buyer did not, what would you think of the transaction?'

"To this question the realistic novelist in embryo wrote out the following reply;

"'The boy was unfair, he was a cheat and a thief, and would run away happy and buy some cigarettes or maybe a box of mixtures.'"

World's Debt to Marco Polo.

Marco Polo was the first man to trace a route across the whole longitude of Asia. He gave the first accurate information on Thibet, Japan, China and the Orient generally. He hastened the adoption by Europe of the use of gunpowder and industrial processes which the East had produced. He was an innovator as a military architect and as a bridge builder. He opened the eyes of the business men of Europe and through them of the world as we know it today, to the possibilities of trade with the Orient. He knew at least three of the important languages of the East, and stimulated the West to a study of them. He described accurately valuable regions with which Europe did not really get in touch until the Nineteenth century, and this in spite of the fact that his explorations came in the last part of the Thirteenth century.

"Coffee Tree."

The Kentucky coffee tree would be an unusually good lawn tree except for the fact that it is very slow in getting its leaves in the spring. Where that failing is not allowed to score against it, it is distinctly worth getting acquainted with, for it is unusually free from insect pests or fungus troubles, and makes a clean, stout growth. The tree will ultimately grow a hundred feet high in good soil, and has long greenish-white flowers in large panicles at the ends of the branches. Following the flowers come pods which resemble those of beans, and which often stick to the tree through the winter, giving it a very peculiar aspect. In Revolutionary times the seeds in these pods were used for making coffee, which accounts for the name the tree now bears.—Exchange.

Fly's Wonderful Tongue.

The so-called tongue of the fly is not truly a tongue, but a tube with an expanded end, which the scientists term a "ligula." Through this ligula the fly obtains its nourishment. The fly does not need to get down to its food, but draws it upward by means of this trunk or proboscis. Nature recognized the fact that the insect had many enemies and that it must therefore take up in the shortest possible time the food it might discover. For that purpose the tongue is fitted at its free end with a curious pad-like modification of the ordinary tracheal structure, which has puzzled some of those who have studied its uses. Much discussion has arisen in regard to the reason for this peculiar formation of the fly's tongue, but it appears to be generally conceded by entomologists that nature has provided these singular ramifications of the instrument to assist in quickly taking up the drop of sweet or other liquid material. These narrow strips of horny substance that form the proboscis are curved, and are united to one another by a membrane that forms a tube split along the border of the tongue where it comes in contact with the food.

Business Men's Signatures.

His name is about the only thing a busy business man writes with his own hand these days and that, often as not, is illegible. His letters are typewritten with a ruled line at the end where he carves his name in cabalistic strokes. It may be a relic of the old idea that in order to forestall forgery there should be something peculiar, even cryptic, about a formal signature, but however it be, the fact remains that many men boast a signature that is as good, or as bad, as anything Horace Greeley ever did. The trick or affectation of illegibility is an irritating habit, and it is surprising that some efficiency expert hasn't figured out before this how many working hours are lost every day because of the puzzled efforts of receivers of letters to decide whether the communication is from Rudyard Kipling, author, or John Smith, junk dealer.

Remember?

Little Margery wanted to talk over the telephone with her mother, who was visiting a friend, so her elder sister gave her the phone number and let her call Central. A few days after this conversation, when the mother was paying another visit to the same friend, the older sister overheard Margery at the telephone. Central evidently had been asking for the number, and Margery was explaining vehemently: "Central, I want the number I had Thursday. Don't you understand? The same number."

Slight Change in Text.

The Pullman being very crowded, little Elsie had to sleep in an upper berth. It was a wonderful adventure and it filled her with great glee. Her mother did not succeed in getting her quiet until it was time for her to say her prayers, but she was a well-brought-up little girl and knew that prayers must always be said earnestly. She knelt in her upper berth and began in a serious little voice: "Now I lay me up to sleep. . . ."

Iron-Bearing Plants.

Experiments have been under way to increase the quantity of iron carried in certain plants, with a view to the effect on the human system, when those plants are used as food. Artificially prepared foods containing iron do not always produce the desired effect, because the iron is not completely assimilated. This difficulty, it is thought, may be avoided by causing plants to take up an increased quantity of iron during their natural growth. By adding hydrate of iron to the soil in which it was growing, the experimenters have, it is reported, succeeded in producing spinach containing a percentage of iron seven times as great as that found in ordinary spinach. It is believed that the process will prove successful with other ferruginous plants.

Astronomers' Difficulties.

The astronomer peering through his telescope has to look through 50 turbulent miles of the earth's atmosphere. Even under the best conditions the rays of light which enter his telescope have been more or less deviated in their courses by refraction in passing from one layer of air to another, and in consequence the diffraction pattern of disk and rings, which can be so clearly and beautifully shown in the laboratory, oscillates, trembles and is more or less confused and distorted. Under more ordinary and worse conditions of "seeing" the image is more disturbed and dances about, coming only occasionally to rest, and it is during these favorable intervals alone that close pairs of stars can be seen double.

Sensitive Soul.

Timothy Carlson was a very sensitive man. More than once at a harsh word he had forsaken profitable work and gone home for sympathy to his wife. One morning Tim started out to help Harley Boggs, who had bought a new stump-pulling machine and was preparing to clear a field. Toward noon Timothy came back. Mrs. Carlson sighed and waited sympathetically for the explanation. "I jest couldn't stand it," said Timothy, rubbing his jaw. "When I see that stump puller twist them roots out it reminded me so of the times I went to the dentist to get back teeth extracted. The first thing I knew I was limp as a rag and I jest ached all over and had to quit."

SPEED DEMONS AT COUNTY FAIR

Auto Polo Contests Every Day Of Fair Is Another Big Attraction.

With some of the best dirt track drivers in the country racing at the Pennington County Fair on Aug. 6th, the closing day, the people of this section of the state will have opportunity to witness the greatest display of speed ever put on before at a county fair. Some of the drivers now entered at the State Fair at Grand Forks have already signed up, and acceptance from others is expected by the end of this week. As a feature attraction for four days of the fair, the crack All-American auto polo team is to play the Pacific Coast team in a four series game. A hot battle is expected since these veterans know all tricks of the game. No game offers such thrills, action and excitement that auto polo does and fair goers will be assured their money's worth in this feature alone.

New Auto Trail

A movement is on foot to extend the Chippewa Trail now laid out from Detroit to Red Lake Falls. The plan is to run it west over into Dakota along a route to be determined. By coming thru here to Thief River it would have an advantage by running over the Babcock road to Warren which is graded and in good shape.

Coming Thursday

The tour of the Minnesota Red River Valley Development Ass'n. scheduled to pass thru here next week will reach St. Hilaire at 12:10 and leave at 12:30, making a stop of 20 minutes. Coming during dinner hour will make it somewhat inconvenient for most people, but all who can possibly do so should be on hand to greet the visitors and hear the speakers.

Mrs. C. F. Brantner and baby son arrived at Maple Lake last week from Aurora, Ill., for a visit at the Patterson summer home.

Annual school election held last Saturday evening was very quiet, only a few votes being cast. No changes on the board were made as result of the election.

Wrist Watch "Found"

The wrist watch lost by Mrs. C. O. Johnson while she was witnessing the sports program at the Community Club picnic a few weeks ago, was found recently in a peculiar manner. Pete Burstad was milking a cow in the pasture and she appeared to be favoring one foot, so Mr. Burstad investigated and found the watch wedged between the two parts of the hoof. The watch was uninjured and started running as soon as wound.

Entertains Friends

Mrs. F. N. Bjerken entertained a party of friends Friday afternoon in honor of her mother and sister, Mrs. Chas. Weston and Miss Pearl Weston who were guests at the Bjerken home. Jepson, and the Misses Dorothy Martz, Grace Hall, Gladys Olsen, Blanche Robson and Mildred Fellman.

Brother Dies

Mr. and Mrs. T. K. Hovet left Monday by auto for Buxton, N. D., in response to a message stating a brother of Mr. Hovet had passed away. The brother was in good health when the Hovets visited there a short time ago, and they were looking forward to a visit from him next week so it is evident death took place suddenly.

Mike McAndress has rented out his farm and intends to close out his stock and machinery by public auction. He has some of the finest bred stock in the Northwest and stockmen interested in pure breds will do well to augment their herds by additions from the McAndress stock.

Selvig Exonerated

The University of Minnesota Board of Regents on their annual visit at the Northwest School at Crookston last week, called in three former members of the faculty, who had not been recommended for reappointment, to hear their charges made against Supt. Selvig. The board found absolutely no foundation whatever for the charges preferred against Supt. Selvig. Supposition is current that the former faculty members made the charges in retaliation when their services were despensed with at the school. Many local friends of Mr. Selvig are highly gratified with the turn of events.

Blueberries Plentiful

Mr. and Mrs. John Hansen, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Roy, Ruth Roy, and five members of the Peter Johnson family autoed Sunday up into Marshall county on a blueberry picking expedition. LOCAL TEAM WINS AGAIN

Take Fast Gonvick Team Into Camp By 8 To 7 In Last Sunday's Game.

The St. Hilaire ball team added another victory to their string last Sunday when they met and defeated Gonvick on the latter's home ground, by a score of 8 to 7. The locals had things pretty much their own way the first six innings In the seventh a questionable decision on foul fly gave Gonvick two scores. The balance of the game was evenly played with St. Hilaire maintaining their lead without difficulty.

Next Sunday the locals go to Viking for a return game with the team there. The three following Sundays will be taken up with games with Gonvick, Middle River and Red Lake Falls, all games to be played here. The team is also scheduled to meet Grygla on the first day of the Pennington County Fair.

RELICS OF AN ANCIENT RACE

Important Discoveries, Which Will Be Carefully Investigated, Recently Made in Oregon.

Relics more important than any previously uncovered have been dug up in the Big Eddy district along the Columbia river, in Oregon, where evidences of an ancient Indian civilization have just been found. The burial ground which has been revealed by highway excavations is proving more extensive than at first supposed.

So important is the discovery considered that the state highway commission has given orders to proceed with great care with the work and to save all relics.

An entire wagonload of relics was taken to The Dalles for shipment to the Oregon Historical society in Portland. George H. Hines, curator of that organization, made a personal inspection of the excavations and pronounced the discovery the most important ever made in the Northwest. It is planned to bring to the society's rooms all the relics found so that they may be studied by scientists, who are expressing the greatest interest in the developments.

Stone utensils and copper ornaments comprise most of the objects so far discovered. Many human bones are uncovered, but they crumble to dust as soon as exposed to the air. Hundreds of sightseers and scientists are flocking to the scene of the work and it has been found necessary to keep the relics closely guarded to prevent their being carried away.

Do You Say "Hiccup?"

The Teacher's World of London, Eng., thinks the spelling of a common word of sufficient interest and importance to call the attention of its readers to the common usage which is a common error in Canada as well as in England. It says: "The newspapers persist in printing 'hiccough,' though the more correct version of the word is surely 'hiccup.' So misleading is the former that many good people are even saying 'hiccuf,' greatly to the delight of new spellers. The dictionary tells us that 'hiccup' was first mistakenly spelled 'hiccough' because of its supposed connection with 'cough.' Not one London daily uses the correct form of the word as far as my observation goes. Dictionaries, unfortunately, are not consulted as often as they might be. How rarely will John Citizen take the trouble of looking up a word in his dictionary!"

Early Glazed Windows.

It is said that in the reign of Henry III of England a few ecclesiastical buildings had glazed windows. Suger, however, a century before, had adorned his great work, the abbey of St. Denis, with windows, not only glazed, but painted; and I presume that other churches of the same class, both in France and England, especially after the lancet-shaped window had yielded to one of ampler dimensions, were generally decorated in a similar manner. Yet glass is said not to have been employed in the domestic architecture of France before the Fourteenth century; and its introduction into England was probably by no means earlier. Nor indeed did it come into general use during the period of the Middle ages.—Christian Science Monitor.

"Peter, Where's Thy Wife."

Man is always imagining that he hears bits of human speech in the calls of Birds. The Boer on the South African veldt, though he seems unimaginative enough to a stranger, has his own pretty fancies of that sort. One of them is referred to by a correspondent of the New York Times: After a protracted winter the first signs of spring are the letters persons write to the press to say that they have heard the call of the red-throated cuckoo. The Dutch call him Piet, mijn vrouw (Piet, my wife), because his call sounds like those words. The story is that a Dutchman named Piet shot a female cuckoo one day and that ever since the male bird has followed him, asking, "Piet, mijn vrouw?" The story gains point from the fact that there is something melancholy in the bird's cry and that no answering call by the mate is ever heard.

Human Bones Under Lava.

In the valley where stands the City of Mexico, and almost in the outskirts of that metropolis, the ancient bones of human beings have been found beneath a bed of lava. Tunnels have been driven several hundred feet beneath the lava bed, and the bones, found in several places, have not been removed. Instead, they have been saturated with silicate of lime to harden and preserve them, and they have been placed in glass cases exactly where the diggers came across them, so as to be viewed by anybody who may be interested. The bones may be 1,000 or 10,000 years old. There is no historical record of the volcanic eruption which made the lava bed. Undoubtedly it occurred a very long time before Cortez visited the capital of Montezuma.

Home Talent Only

The Red Lake Falls Gazette suggests that baseball team managers in this section of the state get together and plan to play only home talent instead of salaried players. While the latter are good in many instances, they have made no extraordinary showing in this part of the state this year. Not only do they take out a lot of money from the community, but their playing does not create enthusiasm like an all home team. People must know their players personally in order to get keyed up to the right pitch which makes a ball game real sport. With a home team it would not be necessary to charge so much admission either which would tend to greater attendnce.

It's a good plan, and we hope to see it in operation. Some of the ugly spirit shown at games now days could be despensed with too, without injury to the sport.

Worth Weight in Gold.

Of Shakespeare as originally printed there are not enough volumes to make a fair-sized armful. There are in existence two copies of "Hamlet," one lacking the title page, in the British museum, and the other lacking the leaf, in the United States. Of "Venus and Adonis," there are 13 known copies of the first eight editions, while of "Titus Andronicus" there is but a single copy. These "super-rarities" are called "quarto volumes" and command tremendous prices. The "folio" editions, which came later, are very rare, too, though not as rare as the quartos.—Winnipeg Tribune.

The "Ads" of Old.

Advertising is not a new art by any means. Advertisements of a kind approaching our modern ideas were in vogue in ancient Egypt, Greece and Rome. These, however, were mostly descriptions of runaway slaves, offers of reward for lost property, and so on. The people of Pompeii went much further. On the excavated walls of the buried city have been found announcements of gladiatorial shows, with rough pictures of favorite gladiators, etc., that must be taken as anticipations of the modern picture poster.

LAST MONTH, on a bet.
WITH THE boys up home.
I SPENT a night.
ALONE IN the old.
HAUNTED HOUSE.
AND WHEN I heard.
MOANS AND groans.
I SAID "The wind."
AND TRIED to sleep,
I HEARD rappings.
AND SAID "Rats."
AND ROLLED over.
THEN I heard steps.
AND IN the light,
OF A dying moon.
A WHITE spook rose.
I WASN'T scared—much.
BUT DIDN'T feel like.
STARTING ANYTHING.
BUT THEN I caught.
JUST A faint whiff.
OF A familiar.
AND DELICIOUS smell,
WHICH TIPPED me off,
SO I gave the ghost.
THE HORSE laugh,
AND SAID "Ed.
YOU FAT guys.
MAKE BUM ghosts.
BUT BEFORE you fade,
LEAVE WITH me one.
OF YOUR cigarettes.
THEY SATISFY."

THAT spicy, delicious aroma of fine tobaccos, both Turkish and Domestic, makes you almost hungry for the "satisfy-smoke." And there isn't a ghost of a chance you'll ever find its equal anywhere—for the Chesterfield blend is an exclusive blend. It can't be copied.

Traffic Increasing

Tourist traffic on the Jefferson Highway is assuming greater proportions every day. Iti s no uncommen sight to see a score or more of cars loaded down with camping outfits going either up or down the Highway. Some of the northbound ones are taking in the blueberry harvest up near the border, while those southbound are going down to the lakes. A good percentage of cars passing thru here bear foreign license tags, more from Canada being noted this season than ever before.

Shut Out Viking

The ball team autoed last Sunday to Viking to play their return game with the team there. Although Viking had reinforced their lineup to some extent, they proved easy for the locals who won out by eight to nothing. The locals have three straight games scheduled on home ground and also one game with Grygla at the Pennington County Fair which in all will wind up playing this season.

Birthday Party

Some forty friends of "Grandma" Peterson sprung a surprise party on her yesterday, the occasion being her 75th birthday anniversary. The party was held at the August Svenson home east of town where a social afternoon was spent after which a dainty luncheon was served by Mrs. Svenson, assisted by her daughters, Mrs. Johnson and Mrs. A. Sand, and by her sister, Mrs. Kinney. Besides wishing Grandma many happy returns of the occasion, the guests presented her with a suitable reminder of the occasion. Those present were: Mesdames H. Jackson, John Jackson, C. Weston, J. King, S. Skattum, Eric Parson, N. A. Nelson, Dr. and Mrs. F. Bjerken, Mr. and Mrs. T. Hovet, Mr. and Mrs O. Gunstad, Mr. and Mrs. Leo Carpenter and daughter, Rev. and Mrs. A. F. Nelson, Mrs. P. Swanson, Mrs. F. Satterberg, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Johnson and family, Mrs. James Kinney and daughters, Mrs. A. Sande and children, Messers Ed. Peterson, Chas. Nelson and M. Hyland.

The Thief River ball team wound up the season by defeating the Minot, N. D., team Monday.

A very good attendance was noted at the picnic given last Sunday by the Norwegian Lutheran school.

Mrs. Gustaf Anderson is spending a few days at the Bakko home before leaving for her home at St. Paul.

Called By Death

Mrs. E. Thompson, formerly Miss Annie Opperud, of this place, and whose home is at Cooperstown, N.D., died Monday in New Mexico where she went last winter for the benefit of her health. According to word received here by Mrs. A. Satterberg, sister of the deceased, the remains were shipped back to Cooperstown and funeral services will be held there Friday afternoon this week. Mrs. Thompson is survived by her husband, mother, sister and several brothers. She grew to womanhood here, and was well known to a great many people in this vicinity. Mr. and Mrs. Satterberg leave today by auto for Cooperstown to be present at the funeral.

A big deal was closed whereby the Shevlin interests bought Hill's interest in the townsite here, and also half interest in the boom and waterpower company. A sawmill of 30 million feet capacity was to be built the following spring.

A banquet was given at Brink's hall by citizens to celebrate location here of the big sawmill. Landlord Arthur was in charge of the banquet, and the "Pembina Harvist" furnished music. A number of people from nearby towns were present for the occasion which was one of the most enjoyable ever held here.

The residence occupied by Oscar Lindquist and family at Crookston, and owned by Mrs S. J. Larson, mother of Mrs. Lindquist, was almost completely gutted by fire last Thursday. Unless there is a material change fom present outlook, the spud crop will be a light one here this year. Thos. Anderson Dies

Thomas Anderson, son of O. A. Anderson, died Saturday at the military hospital at Minneapolis where he underwent an operation a short time before. Thomas was in military service during the later part of the war and was stationed at Camp Dodge. It is believed that during one of the numerous sandstorms at camp, a grain of sand became lodged in his ear. The ear begun to pain while he was in camp and grew gradually worse after his release. He took treatments at various times without getting relief, and as last resort consented to the operation, which is one of the most delicate known. He failed to rally promptly so his father was called to his bedside and was with him when the end came. The remains were shipped here Monday and a military funeral hold the same afternoon from the Nor. Lutheran church, Rev. C. M. Grimsrud officiating. Members of the local post American Legion acted as pall bearers while the Elmer Eklund post of Thief River, of which Thomas was a member, furnished a guard of honor and firing squad.

After services at the church, the funeral cortage, numbering over fifty autoes in all, wended its way to the Swedish cemetery east of town where, after the flower-covered casket had been lowered to its last resting place, three volleys were fired over the grave, and "taps" sounded by comrades of the departed.

He leaves to mourn his sudden and untimely end, his father, O. A. Anderson, five brothers, Arthur, Oliver, John, George and Alec, and a sister, Inga Anderson, besides a large number of other relatives. All immediate relatives with exception of John, were present at the funeral. Relatives from out of town present were: Mrs. A. Johnston of Crookston, Mr. and Mrs. P. Johnson of Crookston, Mr. and Mrs. Ole Johnson of Holt, Mrs. Lokker and Inga Anderson from Grafton, N. D.

Heartfelt sympathy of the entire community is extended to the bereaved relatives in their loss of one who was held in high esteem by all with whom he came in contact.

A fine shower of rain fell Tuesday afternoon working wonders at restoring pastures and refreshing garden truck which were badly in need of moisture.

FRANCE GOT REAL BARGAIN

Country Obtained Famous Statue of the Venus de Milo at a Cost of Only $150.

France, in preparing to celebrate the centenary of the presentation of the Venus de Milo to the Louvre, recites a version of the discovery in curious conflict with the story told in the latest collection of data in "A Century of Archeological Discoveries."

"As far as human evidence can now take us the immortal statue was found in 1820 in several pieces by a peasant of Melos. French officers were told of the find, examined it, and reported the matter to Brest. Brest told Smyrna, Smyrna told Constantinople, and the French ambassador there offered to buy the statue.

A Greek priest, however, had already bought it from the commune of Melos, but being hard up, had not paid the cash. A messenger from the French legation thereupon tempted the commune with 750 francs ($150), and carried off Aphrodite.

The angry priest protested, and the commune was fined by the sultan 7,000 piastres, afterward reduced on the appeal of the conscience-stricken French ambassador at Constantinople.

Old Korean Legend.

The Koreans explain the reason why sparrows hop on both feet instead of putting one before the other, and the reason why flies run their feet together when they alight, in the following way: The sparrow and flies had a quarrel and decided to ask the governor of the Korean provinces to arbitrate the matter. He found them both wrong and gave orders to have them both whipped, and it made the sparrows jump up and down with pain, and the flies put their hands together and prayed to be forgiven. The governor forgave them both, but as a sign he decreed that sparrows should always hop and that flies should rub their feet together when they alighted.

When You Whirl.

As things appear to be going around in a circle when we are dizzy—our common sense tells us that they must be stationary—it would seem that the fault lies in, or near, the ear—an organ which apparently has nothing to do with sight or feeling. Close to the ear is located the little organ which gives us our power of balance, permits us to walk upright without tottering, and, when properly trained, to assume postures which are distinctly outside the regular routine of our daily lives. Eccentric dancers, acrobats, athletes, and others have unconsciously trained this "balance wheel" until they can do strange things without, as we say, losing balance.

FURNITURE BUILT TO LAST

Constructed of Concrete, It Can Defy Even the Abnormally Destructive Small Boy.

Furniture manufacturers say that it is hard for them to get enough of the various woods needed in their business. They have been reduced to veneers about as thin as a coat of varnish for some of the old favorites. The solid stuff is rare. In the search for substitutes they took to pouring concrete ships in place of wood and steel vessels. Now that they are pouring blocks of concrete homes for tenements and concrete cottages for our toilers they may as well pour concrete furniture at the same time. A stone dining-room table surrounded by a group of immovable and nonbustable concrete chairs would be possible and comparatively cheap. Nowadays a mahogany davenport may cost $1,000 or less, but when a contractor is putting in a fireplace he might as well pour a concrete davenport to face it. It would be durable and could be made quite comfortable with a stack of feather beds. If a house were fairly stocked up with this concrete furniture there would be no danger of burglars backing in with a moving van and carting the stuff off in the absence of the owner.

"Coffee Tree."

The Kentucky coffee tree would be an unusually good lawn tree except for the fact that it is very slow in getting its leaves in the spring. Where that failing is not allowed to score against it, it is distinctly worth getting acquainted with, for it is unusually free from insect pests or fungus troubles, and makes a clean, stout growth. The tree will ultimately grow a hundred feet high in good soil, and has long greenish-white flowers in large panicles at the ends of the branches. Following the flowers come pods which resemble those of beans, and which often stick to the tree through the winter, giving it a very peculiar aspect. In Revolutionary times the seeds in these pods were used for making coffee, which accounts for the name [illegible]

An official connected with a packing plant in southern Minnesota, embezzled over a million dollars from the concern during the past six years without the company becoming aware of his peculations. Statements by packers that they are doing business on a mighty slim margin will be discredited somewhat by stock raisers when they read how this official took over a million from the company's working capital without suspicion. Embezzlement of one quarter of that sum from the average stock raised would likely make him sit up sur take notice especially at the present prices for stock. It looks queer to the average person, and the packers may have to get a new line of argument to convince the public they are operating at very small profit.

Many Substitutes for Tea.

There are more than 30 plants used in different parts if the world as substitutes for tea. One of them comes from the dried leaves of a fragrant orchid, a parasite like the mistletoe, and allied to the well-known vanilla of the odor of which it reminds us. The Africans have long used its leaves as medicine, and the infusion of them as a drink. Its taste is something between vanilla and bitter almonds.

Ink Spots.

For fresh ink stains apply an abundance of soap and wash hard. A little lard rubbed on the stained places before the soap is applied will loosen the stain. If this is not successful a saturated solution of oxalic acid is about all that will remove the ink. Soak the stain for a few seconds, then rinse in clear water and finally in water to which a few drops of ammonia have been added.

Silly Prison Sentence.

In Italy it is not uncommon for a criminal to receive full sentence upon each of a number of separate convictions. In Sicily, for instance, a man named Lupo Salvatore was found guilty of 63 different acts of fraud. He was condemned to three years' imprisonment on each of the 63 counts, bringing the total length of his sentence to 189 years.

First English Canal.

England admitted the commercial value of canals at an early date, its first canal being constructed in 1134, under the direction and patronage of Henry I, when the waters of the Trent were connected with the Wiham and much public advantage was derived from the waterway.

No Real Excuse for Moods.

Many mean things are done in the family, for which moods are put forward as an excuse, when moods themselves are the most inexcusable things of all. A man or woman in tolerable health has no moral right to indulge in moods.—J. G. Holland.

"When making a long sea voyage plenty of ready cash should be taken," advises a correspondent in a daily paper. It certainly must be terrible to be shipwrecked and cast upon an uninhabited island without a shilling in your pocket.—London Punch.

With a pastebrush give the paper a coat of hot flour paste—the same kind that is used in putting wallpaper on. This will quickly loosen it and it can be easily peeled off. Keep a strip ahead on the application of the paste to give it time to soak.

CITY'S MONEY WELL SPENT

Enormous Expenditures of the Country's Metropolis Held to Be Justified by the Results.

There are 227 cities of 30,000 population and more in the United States whose balance sheets are examined by the federal census bureau, and they owe net debts amounting to $2,679,551,000 or $77.82 a head. Of this aggregate indebtedness New York owes two-fifths, or $1,009,309,000.

This is a vast sum of money but it is the debt of a great, rich city, which is constantly growing greater and richer. Some of the money may have been wasted, but most of it was put into productive enterprises necessary to the public service, or into parks, boulevards, schoolhouses, fire departments and police department stations, bridges, railroads, water works; scores and hundreds of essentials for civilized urban life.

That New York owes such a large proportion of the aggregate city debt of the nation is not surprising. It has had to spend more money than other towns because its great population makes heavy expenditures impossible to avoid.—New York Herald.

EVOLVED IN BRAIN OF POET?

World Has Long Wondered Where Bryant Found the Since Celebrated Name of Oregon.

When the poet Bryant, in "Thanatopsis," employed the word "Oregon" as applying to the great western empire washed by the Pacific and drained by the Columbia river, he did a thing that has kept the world busy ever since in attempting to discover where he found the word. The enigma is still unsolved. That was the first time, so far as history knows, that the word Oregon was used. The origin of the word California is enveloped in a no less dense cloud. Although Cortez, one-time captain general of the peninsula, called the territory Santa Cruz, a late discovery indicates that he may have been responsible for the name. It was October 14, 1524, that he either heard or invented a story to the effect that "lying ten days' journey from Colina" was "an island of women only, abounding in pearls and gold." Forthwith he turned to the calendar of saints to choose a name for the fabulous island. He found under that date the saints, Calixto and Fortunata. While selecting neither of these names, Cortez evidently combined them, using the first parts of each and adding the suffix "nia"—Cali-for-nia. In the same way he selected a name for the queen of the fabled isle. Her name is Calafia.

Effective in Ancient Warfare.

Among types of sword famous in the past must be mentioned the great two-handed affair swung by the Germans in lansquenets, who were much mixed up in the French religious wars. So large was it, it could not be carried at the side in a scabbard, but had to be swung across the back. When the lansquenets went into action they had to be stationed a good distance apart, in order to confine the casualties to the enemy. Each took his stand, started the old scythe going and developed quite a sphere of influence.

Snake No Match for Ants.

That ants should be able to kill a snake may seem incredible, at first. When an enemy is sighted the alarm is given at once and the whole community of ants arises in a body. They set upon the reptile, striking their nippers into it at thousands of points. The attack is made with such enormous numbers that the snake has no chance of escaping. When the snake is dead the ants will tear off the flesh in small pieces, taking all away with them except the bones and skin.

Soundproofing a large Chicago office by means of felt panels for walls and ceilings is stated to have effected a real transformation. The din of the typewriters is subdued by the suppression of echoes, with greatly lessened nerve fatigue and increased efficiency, and the sound of the voice seems to be intensified within a few feet, making conversation easy. A signal bell in the room has taken on a curiously muffled tone, as though wrapped in cotton.

A STILLER GUEST

By FLORENCE MELLISH

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It was a rainbow wedding—a pink maid-of-honor and blue and canary and lavender and pale green bridesmaids. Evelyn looked so sweet and childlike in her white gown and veil that I just curled into my corner of the pew and cried. I had loved her from her babyhood. I had made her first short frocks and rompers and her graduation gown, but my fingers had grown too stiff to be trusted with wedding garments.

Maurice Penfield, looking more dignified and self-possessed than ever, was none the less handsome for his graying temples.

"Isn't he fine looking?" Luella Bates whispered, "and so talented, and rich, too! But aren't you sorry he's a widower—a warmed-over man?"

"No," I whispered back, "he has been tested, and he has borne the test. He was all devotion to his invalid wife."

Luella was silenced, but down in my heart I was a little sorry. I wanted our Evelyn's marriage to be ideal in every way.

But, after all, it was not the lovely bride or the stately bridegroom who held the eyes of the little company that filled the pews. It was the lady who sat stiffly upright in the fourth pew of the west wing. They were whispering to each other:

"Who is the lady in gray?"

Doctor Landphear began the service in his quiet, penetrating tones. When he came to the words: "If any one knows any reason why these two should not be joined in marriage, let him speak now, or forever hold his peace," and I held my breath for an instant as I always did. I always had a nervous feeling: "What if some one should come forward and speak?" I had been a guest at 24 weddings, and no one had come forward.

This time some one did. It was the lady in gray.

"I know a reason," she said in a deep voice that could be heard in every corner of the church.

Doctor Landphear looked surprised, but he kept his usual dignified poise.

"Will you state your reason?" he asked quietly.

"My sister Muriel is Maurice Penfield's wife, and my sister Muriel is here."

The pink maid of honor flushed with anger. The lavender bridesmaid was in tears. The canary bridesmaid lifted her chin haughtily. The blue and pale green bridesmaids clung together tremblingly. Evelyn herself was deathly pale. Maurice Penfield threw a strong arm about her."

"It is my sister-in-law. The poor woman is insane." He turned to one of the ushers. "Can you take her out quietly?"

Evelyn turned instantly and looked behind her. I could see how violently she was trembling. Maurice drew her gently back.

"Try to be calm, Evelyn. The poor mad woman is not worth minding."

"But Muriel is there, I saw her myself," she shivered.

"Evelyn," he said, sternly, this time, "you must be calm." Then speaking to Doctor Landphear: "I think we may go on now."

Months after the dear girl came to me in that same little shabby room and told me the whole story.

"I am happy now, Miss Buffum," she said. "But I was very unhappy at first. Maurice was very patient and tender with me, but I could not make him understand. He would not believe that Muriel did come. He thought it was simply a case of nerves."

"But, Evelyn, I saw no one."

"But she was there. She came again. She came three times. I used to feel so guilty and frightened. You see, it was the locket."

"The locket, Evelyn?"

"Yes, the dearest, loveliest, quaintest silver locket you ever saw. It contained a lock of Muriel's hair. He had given it to Muriel, and she always wore it night and day underneath her gowns. Before she died she gave it back to Maurice and charged him never to let anyone else wear it. He showed it to me once, and I was childishly jealous. I wanted to wear it, and I worried Maurice until he gave it to me. I had it on under my wedding gown in church when Muriel came."

"But, Evelyn—"

"She did come. She came again three times and stood beside my bed. It was in the early morning when it was just beginning to be light. Maurice was always asleep and he would not believe it. But I saw her plain—her eyes were so sad and reproachful. The third time she stood with her eyes fixed on the chain that held the locket. It came to me what she wanted and I unclasped it and gave it to her. She smiled then and she didn't go out by the door. She just seemed to fade away and was gone. She never came again. I have lost my foolish jealousy of poor, sweet, gentle Muriel, and I am happy now."

"Did you tell Maurice about it?"

"Yes. I knew he felt some compunction over giving me the locket, and I wanted him to know that Muriel had it back. But he never could believe me. He said I must have dropped it into the fur rug and one of the chambermaids had found it."

LOCALS DEFEAT THIEF RIVER

As pretty a game of baseball as the most ardent fan would care to witness took place here last Sunday when the Thief River Falls team came down to substitute for the Gonvick club who were unable to fill their date with the local team. The first six innings played were practically errorless and airtight, resulting in no scores for either side. During the balance of the game Thief River managed to score one on an error while St. Hilaire crossed the pan three times. Thief River had more home players this time than usual, and as most of them were well known to local fans, the game was very interesting to watch. PROSPECTS ARE GOOD FOR TRAIL

According to reports from various localities thru which the pathfinding tour by representatives of the Chippewa Trail was made a week ago last Monday, prospects are good for location of the trail thru here to Thief River and Warren and from there into Dakota. The Trail would follow the Jefferson Highway from Red Lake Falls to where it turns up the Pembina Trail west of Thief River, and fom there it would go over the state road to Warren. This route has the added advantage of passing thru many towns which would be good from viewpoint of the tourist. Considerable more tourist trade thru here would result if the Chippewa is routed this way, and for that reason the plan should have the whole hearted co-operation of everybody here.

Beat Viking

The St. Hilaire ball team met and defeated Viking at the Pennington County fair grounds yesterday afternoon by a score of 10 to 6. The game was an interesting one in spite of the one-sided score. Viking had reinforced their lineup with the Thief River battery but the local lads found their offerings almost at will.

St. Hilaire has lost only two games this season and hope to maintain that record for the balance of games to be played.

A very old man was polishing a brass plate, set beside the doorway of a savings bank, on which the lettering read, "Save Your Money."

A well-dressed young fellow, passing by, stopped and observed the incongruity of this shabby, underpaid old workman polishing a legend, the significance of which had obviously never penetrated his consciousness.

"How long have you been polishing that sign?", he asked jauntily.

"Fifteen years," the old man answered.

The young man laughed.

"It doesn't seem to have had any effect on you, pop", he said. "Have you got a thousand dollars in the bank?"

"Have you?" the old man inquired.

"No-o-o" the other admitted.

"Well, I have," the old man said, and turned back to his job and KEPT RIGHT ON POLISHING.

CAT SCORED USUAL VICTORY

Japanese Legend Merely Another Feather in the Cap of the Ever-Conquering Feline.

There is an enchanting story told by the Lady Sei Shonagon, a beauty of Japan of nine centuries past, of the emperor's favorite cat — herself a spoiled beauty. She had received a cap of honor and had been raised to the third rank of nobility, with the title of Wiyobu-no-Ototo, or "Chief of the Female Attendants," and was a cat of many graces. Unfortunately, on a day of disobedience, her lady-in-waiting summoned the emperor's dog, Okinamaru, to startle her into good behavior. He barked obediently, and the cat dashed madly behind the screen, where his majesty sat at breakfast, and sought refuge in his arms. The emperor, much shocked, sent for the lord high chamberlain, and pronounced sentence on poor Okinamaru. A thrashing and exile! The Lady Sei describes him as hitherto a happy dog and much esteemed. But a short time before he had been carried in a procession in a willow litter, with peach blossoms and hollyhocks on his head! He was now an outcast on dog island, "and none so poor to do him reverence." He may possibly have found life easier without the hollyhocks, but it is interesting to see that the eternal cat is victorious as ever. The dog is vanquished; the lady-in-waiting ruined, and the cat lies in the emperor's lap and purrs. So was it always; so will it ever be, writes L. Adams Beck in Asia Magazine.

Isn't the Law Wonderful!

A Belgian paper tells of a woman living at Mons who is denied a marriage license because she does not know her name, age or birthplace and therefore "has no legal existence."

The case is analagous to that of a man named Mahony who was hanged some years ago. When the prison physician pronounced him dead, the body was cut down and delivered to the relatives. Life was not extinct, however, and a few hours later the man was quite himself again. He was shot by a murderer some time afterward, but the assassin could not be brought to justice because, as the court said, "Mahony was legally dead, and therefore could not be killed subsequently by anybody."

HEART CAN FEEL NO PAIN

But Vital Organ Sends Out Its Message of Warning When Physical Danger Threatens.

The heart has no nerves of sensation, Stanley M. Rinehart, M. D., writes in the Saturday Evening Post. If the surgeon could get to it without cutting through the sensory nerves on the surface of the body he could operate upon the heart itself without causing pain. And yet pain is sometimes a symptom of heart disease, but it is produced in a roundabout way.

If the heart cannot feel, how can there be pain in heart disease? Branches of the heart nerves go to certain subcenters in the spinal cord, and there they connect with the superficial nerves of sensation. Continued irritation of the heart nerves is thus communicated to the surface nerves and there is reflex or referred pain, not in the heart, but in the chest wall over which the sensory nerves are distributed.

True heart pain is always due to exhaustion of the heart muscle and may be recognized by the presence of other symptoms. It is made worse by the slightest exertion; by anything that increases the rapidity of the heart's contractions. And nearly always the respirations are labored and deep, expressing the desire of the sluggish blood stream for more air. But the pain is in the chest wall, never in the heart.

More significant than pain is a feeling of contraction, of tightness in the chest behind the breastbone, which may be experienced by those of middle age. It is especially noticeable after a full meal, after smoking or during exertion. This is another of nature's quiet warnings. It usually accompanies high blood pressure, with or without hardening of the arteries. The more often the sensation recurs and the more easily it is induced, the more attention it demands.

The color of birds may be changed to white by keeping them in a white room, surrounded by white objects and attended by persons dressed in white, says a naturalist. However, the third or fourth generation is necessary before the bird's feathers are all white.

"Soap Lake" in Oregon.

The "soap lake," as the inhabitants call it, is in the northwestern part of Oregon. If the water be violently stirred or beaten with a stick, it forms thick suds, and when rubbed between the hands it has a soapy feel. Animals refuse to drink the water.

Kosher Meat.

According to Jewish law, the word being literally "ceremoniously clean," animals or fowls to be "koshered" must be killed by a rabbi or his deputy, the chief difference between Jewish and Gentile slaughtering methods being that the Hebrew cuts the throat without first stunning the animal by a blow on the head, as is usually done in other than kosher killing. This seems to be based on the theory that the conscious animal bleeds more thoroughly than one that has been stunned, and, according to Jewish belief, no blood must remain in the meat when it is consumed. Partly in an effort to make this absence of blood doubly sure, the Jewish housewife usually salts her meat heavily and allows it to stand in the salt at least an hour. The salt is then washed off and the meat prepared for eating.

The Love of Color.

Vegetable dyes were used by the aborigines of all parts of America for ornamenting their utensils, staining their baskets and fabrics. Many of the textiles found in the prehistoric graves of Peru are remarkable for their beautiful and permanent colors. Few of these, unfortunately, can be traced to the plants from which they were derived. The introduction of foreign dyes has been disastrous. Their cheapness and the facility with which they can be transported has caused them to be widely adopted in place of native dyes, the preparation of which is fast becoming obsolete. The ancient Mexicans made use of a number of beautiful pigments, mostly vegetable, for the picture-writing of their celebrated codices. Nearly all of their colors can be identified.

Work That is a Pleasure.

If one wants enough to complete a definite piece of work, be it poem, essay, story or some far more definite and prosaic task, I have found that it gets itself done in spite of the insistent pressure of other businesses and the deadening monotony of heavy routine, simply because one goes back to it with delight, schemes to clear time for it, waits for it round corners, and loses no time in spurring and whipping the mind to work, which is necessary in the cases of less attractive tasks. The moment that there comes a leisurely gap, the mind closes on the beloved work like a limpet; when this happens day after day and week after week, the accumulations become prodigious.—A. C. Benson.

The Ship's Husband.

Every ship has a husband and a wife. The "husband" is the person responsible for carrying out repairs, provisioning and other important details connected with the vessel while in dock and when preparing for a voyage. The "wife" is without doubt the sailor's "better half" during the voyage. It is the name given to the receptacle where Jack stores such useful things as needles, cotton, buttons and thread, with which he effects the necessary repairs to his garments. If this receptacle consists of a piece of material, rolled up with the various articles inside, it is generally known as a "house wife."

Remember?

Little Margery wanted to talk over the telephone with her mother, who was visiting a friend, so her elder sister gave her the phone number and let her call Central. A few days after this conversation, when the mother was paying another visit to the same friend, the older sister overheard Margery at the telephone. Central evidently had been asking for the number, and Margery was explaining vehemently: "Central, I want the number I had Thursday. Don't you understand? The same number."

Slight Change in Text.

The Pullman being very crowded, little Elsie had to sleep in an upper berth. It was a wonderful adventure and it filled her with great glee. Her mother did not succeed in getting her quiet until it was time for her to say her prayers, but she was a well-brought-up little girl and knew that prayers must always be said earnestly. She knelt in her upper berth and began in a serious little voice: "Now I lay me up to sleep. . . ."

An Invitation

By BETTY K. KENDALL

(© 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Don't say another word about the dance, I beg of you," said Alice. "I simply can't bear to hear any more about it."

"Since when are such subjects too frivolous for your ears?" queried Bessie, raising her eyebrows and looking up from her fancy work. "Especially when in all your finery and glory you most likely will lead the grand march with Frank."

"Nothing of the kind," answered Alice in a I-don't-care-what-happens tone.

"Didn't you have a new gown for the occasion?"

"Yes, and I'll wear it if only to show some people that I can't be stunned by their audacity."

"But if you're not going with Frank, who is?"

"Bella Johnson."

"Bessie, when a young man talks to you about a dance and asks your opinion on all details, and then at the eleventh hour asks another girl, do you think he can ever justify his conduct?" asked Alice.

"No, and I simply can't understand it," admitted Bessie.

"Are you sure?"

"Positively. Bella and I met Frank on the street. He came towards us in his usual cordial way, and stopped to say to Bella, 'I'm going to take you to the "Entre Nus" affair.' Bella must have had some inkling, as she didn't appear surprised, and only said; 'I thank you; what time will you call for me?'

"For a moment I felt the keen insult that he should invite her in my presence, and then I said: 'I'm going with Edwin Upton.' You know Edwin is always pestering me to go with him, so I knew I could rely upon his taking me. We left Frank at the corner, and though I was the one to be offended, he doesn't even bow to me when we pass each other by."

"Edwin is much shorter than you; don't you feel like a giantess when you're with him?"

"Well," said Alice, "it came to me like a flash that I wouldn't give either one of them the satisfaction that I couldn't go, and anyway a little man with loads of money is better than no man at all."

"That's philosophical enough, my dear, but don't get a bad case of glooms over it. If Frank is so fickle and changeable in his affections, it's better to know it now than later."

After Bessie left, the words, "it's better to know it now," kept ringing in Alice's ears. She hated to face the truth that any man could so lightly throw her friendship aside after all his professions of sincerity.

"I'll not have any one's sympathy," she determined. "At the dance I'll be the gayest of all."

"Why, Alice," exclaimed her friend a few days later, "how much better you look than the last time I saw you; you are fairly radiant. It must be your hat. It's so becoming."

A faint color rose in Alice's cheek. "Don't blame it all on my hat," she said; "give me credit for a portion of my good looks."

"I just saw Bella and she failed completely to appreciate Frank's charms," continued Bessie, "and she never was so bored in all her existence, that she was the only girl whose partner did not send her a corsage bouquet, and he never even was concerned whether her program was filled or not. In fact she said there was no pleasure to go with a young man who was constantly noticing another girl. Why do you think he asked her and then was so rude?"

Alice smiled.

"Promise you'll never tell."

"He was an unwilling victim. Toward the end of the evening Frank came up to me saying: 'Hope you enjoyed yourself.'

"Oh, immensely," I replied.

"Doesn't your back ache from dancing with that midget?" he asked in a maddeningly sympathetic way.

"Not a bit," I answered. "Edwin is a splendid dancer."

"Then you prefer that dwarf's attentions to mine!" he exclaimed in a jealous rage.

"Just as much as you prefer Bella to me," I replied.

"But I don't and never will," he protested, looking at me tenderly. "I asked you for tonight, not her."

"You asked me? How can you deliberately say that when I heard you invite her?"

"Didn't I look at you, when I said 'I'm going to take you to the dance?'"

"Then I laughed and laughed until I could not laugh any more."

"Until that moment I never thought about it. He's cross-eyed, and when he looked at Bella in his own heart and soul he was in reality staring at me. That's where all the trouble came up."

"Oh, how disconcerted Bella would be if she knew."

"She never will. The best part of our quarrel was the reconciliation."

"It's always been my pet aspiration to see you two married," said Bessie.

"Well, your wish will soon come true."

"Alice," asked Bessie, "won't it be dreadful after you are married if Frank should say loving things to you [illegible]

LILACS

By NELLIE A. FAIRBANKS.

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Bill Curtis vigorously applied the old stubby brush broom to his well-worn suit, then stopped for a moment to gaze out across the great green fields.

For 16 years, weather permitting, Bill had watched and loved this time of day, when the sun was casting its last slanting rays.

Tonight he was leaving the home he loved so well and the man who had shared his home and with whom he had worked for 16 years. That was the hard part of going. Something that looked suspiciously like tears welled up in his honest blue eyes, and he gazed for a minute at the man at the sink, doing up the supper dishes. As a rule this man was talkative, but tonight he was strangely silent.

The arduous task of making an old suit look something like new was finally completed and Bill stepped out on the little platform that served as a piazza. He looked sadly at the two empty arm chairs.

"At the end of two days' journey I will be with Marcia again," and once more he could see the little white-clad figure as he left her that last evening. Again he could hear the soft sobbing as she begged him not to be away long, and Bill held her close as he whispered:

"When I have made the little fortune I have dreamed of, then I will come back to you. And when I do come back, Marcia, it will be in lilac-time, just like it is today."

The first few weeks had been unbearable to Bill; then as the months and years passed he fell into that rut of being perfectly satisfied with working hard all day and spending the long evenings with his faithful companion and his pipe.

His little pile of money grew bigger each year until he at last decided it was time to go back to the old home and Marcia. His heart beat faster as he pictured the little vision in white, and he sighed happily as he again entered the little cottage. But his spirits drooped when he beheld Jim, sitting with his head resting in his two hands, a picture of despair. Going over, he placed his hand on Jim's shoulder and said:

"We've spent some very happy years here, old scout, but now I must be going back to Marcia. I wish you could see her, Jim—so small, with wavy tresses and—"

"Yes, but 16 years makes an awful difference, old man," Jim answered.

"Yes, yes," Bill murmured, half absently; "in some people, but not Marcia."

At last the time came when the comrades parted. Jim drove Bill over the two miles to the railroad station, and they silently pressed each other's hand, for neither could speak just then.

Jim drove back to the lonely cottage, seated himself in his arm chair beside the vacant one, and when the big full moon arose its beams fell on one lonely figure, and an empty chair.

In the meantime the train sped on towards Bill's old home and Marcia. His journey ended at noon two days later, but as Bill felt terribly romantic, he waited until the sun was setting, then Marcia must see him first by the lilac bush near her door. As he neared the house he wished he had kept corresponding all these years; but then, he felt sure Marcia loved him enough to watch and wait for him even though it was sixteen years.

He was almost at the gate when a sudden fear took possession of him. Things did not look just right. What if Marcia had gone away, or had died; but no, he must put such thoughts away. At the gate a piercing scream reached his ear—just as he was by the lilac tree, where Marcia must see him first—and two dirty-faced boys came rushing around the corner of the house, the larger one finally overtaking the other, and they immediately started a fist fight.

The door of the house opened quickly, and a woman, one who would easily tip the scales at two hundred, appeared in a soiled gingham dress, sleeves rolled to her elbows, exhibiting a pair of fat red arms thickly covered with white suds, and the equally red face showed plainly she had just emerged from the family washtub.

Bill rubbed his eyes and looked again. There might just have been an ordinary double chin attached to that face, but Bill could swear he saw four. He also noticed the thin, half gray locks, twisted into a little hard knot at the back of her head. Crushing the innocent lilac where he had a few moments before, so romantically placed his hand, he stepped back a little farther.

There was no mistaking. The eyes proved it was Marcia, and if there was the least bit of doubt left in his mind, it disappeared when a man in overalls brushed past him and called out, "Hurry up and get my dinner, Marcia."

And Marcia was just starting back for the kitchen when she espied the man by the lilac bush. Raising her voice, she called out loudly:

"Get away from them lilacs or I'll call the dog."

Three days later Bill turned the corner of his own little cottage, and peeking through the window, beheld Jim in the act of setting one single place at the table.

"Set it for two, old man," Bill [illegible] [illegible]

Agency Cuts Rates

Livestock commission rates 20 to 35 per cent lower than prevailing charges have been adopted by the new co-operative marketing agency organized by Minnesota farmers to handle stock at So. St. Paul. The rates adopted are those set by the state railroad and warehouse commission and which other dealers have prevented going into effect by appealing to the courts. Manager of the agency believes that if local organizations will support their central agency, the cost of doing business can be reduced 50 per cent within two years.

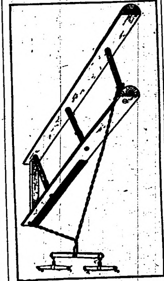
BETTER ROADS

DEVICE TO MAINTAIN ROADS

King Split-Log Drag Was the Invention of a Missouri Man—Its Construction Explained.

The King split-log drag is a good drag made of a split log, and originated by Mr. D. Ward King of Maitland, Mo. Mr. King explains the construction as follows: "Take the two halves of a split log, ten or twelve inches thick and seven to nine feet long. Set the halves flat sides to the front, fasten 30 inches apart with strong stakes, the ends of which are wedged in two-inch auger holes bored through the slabs. Put a solid platform on the stakes for the driver to stand on. The hitch is made of strong wire or chain, the long end fastened to stake over the top of the front slab, the short end put through a hole in center of the slab and near the end to prevent the back slab tilting forward. Face four or five feet of the ditch end of the front slab with iron. An old wagon tire, worn share of road grader, or any piece of flat steel, will answer for this purpose."



The King Split-Log Drag.

HARD ROADS SAVE GASOLINE

They Also Result in Much Less Wear and Tear on Tires, Springs and General Comfort.

In tests recently made at Cleveland, O., a five-ton truck carrying a full load averaged 11.78 miles per gallon of gasoline over a concrete road and but 5.78 miles per gallon over an earth road in average condition.

The truck was tested over seven different kinds of highway. On the earth road the mileage per gallon of gasoline was as above noted, 5.78. On fair gravel, 7.19 miles per gallon; on good gravel, 9.89 miles; on fair macadam, 9.48 miles; on fair brick, 9.88 miles; on good brick, 11.44 miles, and on concrete, 11.78 miles per gallon of gasoline.

According to the above figures, for a man who drives his auto 8,000 miles during the year and assuming that 4,000 miles of the total will be over medium to poor roads, the balance over fair to good roads, the cost of gasoline would be $40 to $50 in excess of what it would be if all of the road was made of concrete.

Besides the extra expense for fuel, there would be a big saving on tires, springs, general wear and tear and comfort.

HAULING ON COUNTRY ROADS

Yearly Average From 1915 to 1919 Amounted to 86,500,000 Tons—Illinois in Lead.

Eleven principal crops afforded 86,500,000 tons for hauling on country roads in the yearly average of 1915 to 1919, or 27 tons per 100 acres harvested. Among the results of computations made by the bureau of crop estimates, United States Department of Agriculture, Illinois is far in the lead of states in providing crop haulage, and its fraction of the United States total is one-tenth, or 8,855,000 tons. Iowa has 6,590,000 tons, and Kansas somewhat more than one-half of the Illinois tonnage hauled, with 4,862,000 tons. Following in order are Nebraska, Indiana, Ohio and Texas, with 4,050,000 tons in the last-named state. The difference between high and low costs of hauling due to poor or good condition of roads reaches a large figure in the hauling of this great tonnage, or a large fraction thereof.

Last Toll Road.

The last toll road in New Jersey passed into history when the state highway commission purchased a four and one-half-mile stretch near Camden for $70,000. The road was constructed in 1850.

FARM STOCK

KEEP PRODUCERS INFORMED

Farmers Advised to Study Market Reports in and Out of Season to Keep Posted.

(Prepared by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.)

How can the farmer and stock raiser turn the live stock reports of the bureau of markets, United States Department of Agriculture, into dollars is frequently asked.

The answer is for the farmer to get so much information out of the reports that he can conduct his breeding, feeding and marketing operations a little more intelligently in the future, and therefore more profitably than in the past.

Market reports are history, and the chief value of history is the basis which it provides on which to forecast the future. In other words, what has happened in the past will probably occur again under the same or similar circumstances.

Small benefit is generally derived from reading a single market report, or one covering a short period of time. Markets move in cycles, and the man who would keep informed must follow them diligently in season and out. This is a matter of particular importance to the stockman, because his business is, to an unusual degree, a long-time speculation. He must prepare now and lay his plans today in light of what he thinks the market will be anywhere from six months to two years hence. But how will the department's reports assist him in doing this?

First of all, he should take into account potential supplies of the particular class of live stock in which he is interested. Assume that cattle is his line. The monthly report, Stock at Stockyards, gives the number of cattle and calves marketed from month to month through 68 central markets. If such movements are unusually heavy for any considerable time, it may indicate a cattle shortage during the next year or two, and a shortage of any commodity usually means higher prices.

This same report also shows the number of cattle and calves that went back to the country as stockers and feeders. If such movements were exceptionally light, it would help to confirm the belief that a comparative shortage in cattle was impending. On the other hand, heavy stocker and feeder shipments would go a long way toward neutralizing the importance of the heavy receipts, for the stockmen would know that most of these cattle going back to the country must be returned to market during the next few weeks or months and enter consumption channels.

Market Reports Are Read With Much Interest by Progressive Farmers.

Having established in this fashion a broad basis for his operations, let us assume the stockman is feeding a lot of steers for the market. He must now give market reports more careful and persistent attention than before. It is quite important that he know what kind of cattle are in best demand on the principal markets. If there is a steady inquiry for heavy finished cattle, and that kind are selling at a premium over lighter weights, it will probably pay him to "feed his cattle out," unless the cost of feed is exceptionally high.

If, however, consumptive demand seems to be drifting steadily toward lighter retail cuts of meat, or, because of general business depression or some other cause, is centering chiefly on the lower and cheaper grades, he may find it more profitable to market his cattle at an earlier age and before they have attained great weight.

Abundant information along this line will be found both in the live stock market reports and the reports dealing with meat-trade conditions in the large consuming centers.

In this connection the stockman will also be interested in keeping advised as to whether the slaughter of meat is increasing or decreasing and whether the movement applies equally to all classes of meat, or whether slaughter of beef is decreasing while that of some other class is increasing. This information is obtainable from the statistical report covering the live stock and meat situation, which is [illegible]

A cutting from a mulberry tree planted by John Milton at Oxford has been planted in the grounds of Milton's cottage at Chalfont. It is a pretty sentiment which inspired such an act; a tribute to the great poet which he would have been the first to appreciate. Having fled from London to this quiet Bucks village, he there put into the hands of friend Ellwood the completed "Paradise Lost." He had him take it home, "read it at my leisure," says Ellwood, "and when I had so done, return it to him with my judgment thereon." Leisure is the spirit of this quiet cottage, with its wealth of climbing roses; the mulberry tree from Oxford will be an added charm in the coming years in this place of literary pilgrimage.—Christian Science Monitor.

The "Wife" Back Home

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Rose Hall came out of the West, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. C. Slater Hall, and her father, Charles S. Hall. Rose came joyously; her mother acquiescently; her father reluctantly, with many protestations. Papa Hall stayed just long enough to get his family ensconced in an exclusive hotel and then hustled back, to see to it that nobody made hay of his business in the sunshine of his absence; for it was his boast that he owed his success to strict personal attention to details.

Mr. Hall left an imposing bank balance subject to his daughter's signature, and for two weeks Rose was sublimely happy. She was a bewitching little blonde. With softly waving hair, to which a fashionable hairdresser did wondrous things, and a petite figure that delighted the exclusive modistes. Innumerable oblongs of pink paper bearing the imprint of a big metropolitan bank passed into willing hands and in exchange Rose received masses of chiffons and laces, satins and velvets, brocades and furs, which the fairy wand of commerce summons for my lady's adornment from the ends of the earth.

For a year previous to the realization of her dream of spending a winter in New York, Rose had studied religiously the Sunday editions of the great city's newspapers. The result was two sheets of letter paper covered with notes of places and things she intended to see. Theaters, famous and obscure; restaurants, fashionable and merely queer; museums, art exhibits, foreign quarters, odd back waters that casual visitors usually missed; everything—even down to the menageries in the parks—Rose had vowed to see it all. And now she was ready to begin. But how was she to go unaccompanied?

In Mrs. C. Slater Hall, Rose could find no solution of her problem. Mrs. Hall possessed two enormous interests, and two only. Her aches and pains and the movies. In her home town it kept her "humping," as Rose expressed it, to keep up with the changes in the programmes of three movie theaters. In New York even unlimited leisure and endless taxis could not bring success to her desperate efforts to see all the "releases." Rose tried the companionship of Marie, her maid.

Marie was blase, unappreciative—no fun at all. Besides, she uttered veiled threats of leaving. Rose turned in her extremity to a certain friendly middle-aged clerk of the hotel, who knew all things.

"If you don't mind the cost," suggested he, "you might engage some decent, presentable young man who knows his New York as a sort of permanent escort. Oh, it's quite often done." The clerk even knew of such a person, until recently a guest of the hotel himself, but a bit out of luck and having some difficulty finding a job. The clerk would make a point of getting in touch with him if Rose wished.

The idea was utterly novel to Rose—but so was New York. She told the clerk to bring on his courier or escort or whatever he might be. And the very next day he did. The young man, who gave his name as Jerald Holmes, seemed all he was represented to be, so Rose engaged him. Then it was a case of breaking the news to her mother. Mrs. Hall bestirred herself to be a little shocked at this caprice of her daughter's, but in the end Rose had her own way, as always.

Jerald Holmes proved to be a delightfully sympathetic companion. As the days went by Rose's enjoyment of the things she had looked forward to was complete; for wasn't she seeing them properly dressed and properly escorted?

Also she was glad—very glad. Rose succeeded in convincing herself—that Mr. Holmes was married. In their first interview he had mentioned a wife "back home," for whom he intended to send when he was settled permanently. Meanwhile, he assured Rose, acting as her escort was an exceedingly pleasant way of bridging over what would have been for him a very awkward period.

If their conversation ever verged on the personal, it was the man who always steered it away; so it was with never a hint to build on that Rose concocted a picture of Mrs. Jerald Holmes. Because her escort had the look of an outdoors man, she placed his wife as the tailor-made type. She probably combed her hair smoothly back and affected those mighty good looking sport suits and sailor hats that one saw in the shops. Unconsciously Rose imagined Mrs. Holmes a direct contrast to herself.

Yes, Rose assured herself, it was far better that her escort should be a married man—provided his wife did not object, and she had Mr. Holmes' word for that. For otherwise he might attempt to make love to her in the many opportunities thrown in his way, and then, of course, she would be obliged to snub him. Or he might be a fortune hunter! This train of thought always landed Rose at the same terminal—that she was glad Jerald Holmes was married—of course!

It was afternoon on one of those mild sunny days which occasionally [illegible] squirrels. Rose had never seen Jerald Holmes in such a happy mood. It was contagious, but at the same time she couldn't help wondering what had caused it. So she questioned, very casually. "Had some good news?"

"Yes," answered her companion, "how did you guess it? Word came this morning that a position I was waiting for is open and I leave New York at the end of the week."

So his position was out of town! Well, what difference did it make to her where it was? If he did not see fit to tell her more about it she would not ask. So, while she was murmuring congratulations, Rose shivered slightly in the wind which seemed to have blown up of a sudden. She wished the mild day had not beguiled her into leaving off her fur wrap.

As the taxi bore them slowly through the intricate traffic that evening on their way to the opera, Jerald Holmes took from his pocket two bits of pasteboard and deliberately tore them up. "Those are the tickets I bought with your money, Miss Hall. These I got myself." He produced two more. "I want you to be my guest at the opera this evening—and to the other places we have planned to go this week. Will you? I want it more than anything else in the world."

Rose turned her head and looked out of the window, but not before Jerald had seen the color flaming into her cheeks as with trembling hands she manipulated the ermine collar of her evening wrap into a shield. After all, she reasoned with herself, why shouldn't she? That woman would have him for always! What would be the harm if she pretended for a few days that there wasn't any such person?

"You are from the West and you can't wear the New York girl's poker face, Miss Hall." So Jerald's voice broke the silence. "You want to accept, but you are worrying about something that does not exist—my wife! You needn't," he continued shamelessly; "I invented her to protect me from possibly designing females."

"Why, you conceited man!" exclaimed Rose, "I won't go anywhere with you now, anyway. Not ever again! I detest you!"

"Look straight at me and say that last again," insisted her escort. Rose tried hard, but her eyes fell before his.

"You can't do it; you haven't got the poker face!" reiterated Jerald Holmes triumphantly as he pulled her hands away from the enveloping collar and held them tightly.

Then Rose couldn't think of a single reason why the world would have been brighter if Jerald had really been married!

HAD FIGHT FOR EXISTENCE

Lizard Embryo Successfully Resisted Efforts of Moss Plant to Prevent Its Natural Development.

During his sojourn in the south of Europe, a French naturalist had the rare opportunity of observing an intensely interesting struggle for existence between an egg and a moss plant.

The egg was that of a lizard which had been deposited on a cushion of moss. It was inclosed by a white protective covering of leatherlike toughness. The moss on which the tip of the egg rested, secreted at the point of contact a substance that gradually dissolved the leathery shell of the egg. When there was no longer any resistance, the stem of the moss plant penetrated the shell and sent its branches through the substance of the egg, emerging at the opposite end.

But the egg was equal to the emergency. It enveloped the stem of the moss inside the egg with a membranous coating that formed an insulating tube around the intruder. Then the moss sent out side branches through the egg, traversing it, but these also were made innocuous by an albuminous coating. In spite of this struggle against the intruding moss, the lizard embryo developed to all appearances normally and finally emerged from its prison unharmed.—Popular Science Magazine.

Best to Forget Family Tree.

Possibly it should be a source of pride to us that a group of able scientists say we are not descended from monkeys, but that monkeys are degenerate descendants of our own race.

The recent discoveries of prehistoric human remains indicate that our family is much older than we supposed. This is very nice, but the accompanying details are the usual results one finds in running up family trees. These ancestors of ours who throve so many aeons ago were impossible people socially from all accounts, and we are wonderful improvements upon them in every way.

Gratitude that our race may feel in being relieved of the stigma of simian ancestry is, therefore, not unalloyed with the unpleasant. There are no indications in scientific research that a Society of the Sons of the Dawn Men will ever be popular.—Toledo Blade.

Censure Comes to All.

It is folly for an eminent person to think of escaping censure, and a weakness to be affected by it. All the illustrious persons of antiquity, and indeed of every age, have passed through this fiery persecution. There is no defense against reproach but obscurity; it is a kind of concomitant to greatness, as satire and invectives were an essential part of a Roman triumph.—Addison.

WHEN DIPLOMAT GOT EVEN

Chinese Minister Waited, but Scored Effectively When the Right Time Came.

In a London club, when the Chinese minister happened to be present, a rather tactless speaker referred to the position of women in China and how they were debarred from so many of the privileges of men. He meant no ill, but what he said was indiscreet and led to a moment's embarrassing silence, after which the conversation was resumed on other subjects.

The minister did not speak for a while, but presently, during a pause, he turned to the man who had made the critical remark:

"This is a very beautiful club you have here, sir."

"Yes, I believe it is the finest."

"Much finer than your ordinary private houses?"

"Certainly. None of our private houses is as large and beautiful as this," was the response.

"I suppose you have your women here—your mothers and sisters and wives and daughters. Of course, you must have them here to enjoy your beautiful house with you."

"Why, no. It is against the rules. They are not allowed here at all."

"Why not?" said the minister.

And the clubman saw the point.—From the Sunday at Home.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

Soldier's Rejoinder Somehow Seemed to Leave Masher in a Mild State of Reflection.

It was a street car, and he was a fearfully-got-up masher. Over his pince-nez he eyed the other passengers haughtily, and they in turn looked at him with amused, indulgent smiles.

Presently a soldier of the Seaforth Highlanders entered and took his seat beside the masher. A stalwart fellow, he soon became the cynosure of all eyes.

The masher looked at him for a moment. Then sliding up to him, he said: "I say, I've got—er—a brother who is a soldier, don't you know!"

"Is that a fact?" said the soldier, taking a look at the questioner; "well, that's queer. Ye see, I've got a brother who is a confounded idiot; so we're about even, I'm thinking."

For a moment the masher looked as if he had swallowed something that had disagreed with him. Then he sank back in his seat and thought it over for the remainder of the journey.—London Tit-Bits.

$66,000 THIEF GIVEN 3 YEARS

Memphis Teller for 12 Years Missed Vacations to Shield His Shortage.

COURT GETS HIS CONFESSION

Began With $100 Holdout and Lived in Hope of Making All Good—Never Missed a Day or Was Late—Strain Was Terrible.

Memphis, Tenn.—Alex V. Smith, formerly note teller for the First National bank, stood convicted, but elated with a three-year term, given to him after he had confessed to a $66,001.37 peculation and pleaded guilty.

During the 12 years Smith was connected with the bank he never took a vacation, never was absent or late in reporting for duty. He told reporters in order to cover up the shortage he had to be continually on the job.

John D. Martin, Smith's counsel, read a copy of Smith's confession to the court in his plea for leniency. The confession says:

"I, Alex V. Smith of Raleigh, Tenn., do hereby make confession.

"I was born in Liverpool, England, on June 8, 1883. I left England and came to the United States when I was about twenty-two years old. After a short stay in New York city I came to Memphis, Tenn., and became a bank clerk in the employ of the Bank of Commerce of Memphis, where I worked for about nine months. I then entered the employ of the First National bank of Memphis, Tenn., and was continuously employed there until January 13, 1921. I was note teller at the First National bank for about 12 consecutive years. During this time I gave diligent attention to the duties of the position.

Began With $100.

"About 11 years ago, one day after the vaults were closed, to accommodate a customer I took a deposit of about $100. That night I used this money to pay a debt, hoping to replace it immediately. It was never replaced, and the shortage grew, until January 12, 1921, it amounted to $66,501.37.

"My method of concealment was throughout the entire period of shortage to hold for a day or two, then remit, being in the manner always short in my remittances.

"I married about eight years ago, and at the time of my marriage my shortage was comparatively small. My family consists of my wife, aged thirty-one years, and three children, Alex V. Jr., aged seven; Jim Mangrum, aged six, and Jay Shaw, aged two years, nine months.

"The moneys which I embezzled from the bank were absorbed in my personal expense and extravagances. I have not dissipated money in gambling or speculation. I have, of course, entertained the vague hope that I could make restitution of these peculations, but have been crushed with the realization that this was impossible.

Strain Has Been Terrible.

"The strain of my situation has, of course, been terrible, and I have suffered immense mental torture for years.

"I have been unable to obtain sufficient sleep or rest except through the use of intoxicants, and have been compelled to resort to the same means as a stimulant to enable me to discharge the regular duties of my office.

"It is my intention and desire that in the event there should be an indictment returned against me on account of my wrongdoing to immediately enter a plea of guilty to the same and throw myself without reservation upon the mercy of the court.

"It is my desire to receive such penalty as may be inflicted on me as speedily as possible, it being my deep desire, after I have met my punishment, to rise again and be a man. It will be my earnest effort to make good, in the fullest measure possible, the loss which has been occasioned as the result of my wrongdoing."

After the shortage was discovered Smith says regarding his conversation with bank officials:

"I gave them the exact figures, to wit, $66,001.87, together with all data and documents pertaining thereto, thereby enabling the officials of the bank to make a speedy adjustment of their records. I gave the exact amount of my shortage as stated above, so that the bank would not be put to the necessity of a long, laborious and expensive audit of my accounts.

RED LALE FALLS TRIMMED 2 TO 0

Game Last Sunday Best Played On Local Ground This Season.

One of the best and cleanest ball games ever played on local ground was that of last Sunday when the Red Lake Falls team came up for their return game. With Keifenheim on the mound for the visitors and Melquist doing the twirling for St. Hilaire, the game was a pitcher's battle from start to finish. Although both sides managed to get men as far as third base several times, there were no scores made until the last half of the eighth inning when a scorching single down the first base line landed Hallemeck safe on first. He stole second, and was brought in by a two base hit by Engh. Hutcheson, next to bat, drove a fly into left field which brought Engh in for a score. These two scores were the only ones made during the game.

Dr. J. Owens umpired the game in his usual satisfactory manner.

Misses Inez Patterson, Ana Patterson and Irma Chamberlain, who are all connected in an official way with the Home School for Girls at Sauk Center, arrived here Tuesday evening for a visit at the Patterson home. They drove by car from Sauk Center to Bemidji, and hiked from there to Red Lake Falls from where they took a car home The girls report a very pleasant trip across country.

Attend the baseball dance at the Imperial next Saturday evening.

Mrs. R. Sagmoen, of Rosewood, spent last week-end here at the home of her mother, Mrs. J. Wahlback.

Mrs. Wm. Olson, Bessie and Adolph Avelson and Mrs. Ed. Person were at Thief River between trains, Monday.

A new school bus for use on the west route from here, is in course of construction at the Olson blacksmith shop.

Curb Speed Fiends

It has become a practice lately with a certain class of autoists to travel thru here at excessive speed. That they are endangering life and property of others seems to be of little concern to them. A suggestion made to the Highway Department some time ago of making a series of "bumps" which would not interfere with those driving at ordinary speed, but would shake up the speeders, should be put into practice here. Lowering the grade at all crossings in town would be effective.

From Oklahoma

Mr. and Mrs. James A. Wilson and family, of Stillwater, Okla., Miss Helen Wilson of Lake City, Minn., and Roland Wilson of St. Paul, motored here and spent last week-end with Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Wilson and family. They left here Monday morning for St. Paul, Lake City, and points in Iowa and Kansas, expecting to reach Stillwater by Aug. 27th.

Mr. Wilson was principal of the Thief River schools about twenty years ago, and is well known to many of the older residents of this section. He is now in charge of the agricultural extension work for the state of Oklahoma.

Mrs. G. I. Fellman and daughter, Mildred, returned Saturday after visiting friends at Cass Lake.

Mrs. O. Sherva and son, Walter, eft yesterday morning over the Soo for Bemidji and Brainard, where they will visit with relatives.

A ball game between Holt and St. Hilaire is scheduled to take place on the local diamond next Sunday afternoon.

The M. E. church is now in readiness, and services will be conducted therea at 3:00 p. m. on Sunday, and the Epworth League meets at 8:00 p. m.

A representative of the Dunn & Bradstreet rating agency was in town yesterday interviewing the business people about their standing for the new rate book about to be issued by that company.

TRUNK HIGHWAYS BEING IMPROVED

Tractor Fleets With Heavy Equipment Are Busy Shaping Roadbeds

The Minnesota Highway Department has undertaken to build up weak sections in long mileages of otherwise good roads in this part of the state. Failure of congress to make the expected federal aid apportionment available for use this season has resulted in the postponment of about half the permanent improvements contemplated, but the department is concentrating on weak spots which, when finished, will put the system in good shape until next year. A tractor outfit is working north from Warren, another between Crookston and Maple Lake, and another from Thief River north along the Warroad branch of the G. N. Ample maintenance forces are at work on the finished grades and are making a very fine showing. Official markings are expected to be up this fall on the highway thru here.

New School Ruling

The St. Hilaire Public Schools will open Tuesday, Sept. 6, 1921 in accordance with a ruling passed by the school board on Aug. 10, 1921.

The board has authorized the principal to make the folowing ruling as provided for at the last session of the Legislature under Chapter 61—H. F. No. 219: All children who will become 6 years old between Sept. 6, 1921 and March 1, 1922, and are residing in the district when school opens must either enter school during the first week or not until after March 1, 1922.

This means that all children who are now between five and one half and six years old must either enter now or wait until March. The object of this rule is to do away with needless interruption with the work in the primary room.

All children, either in the grade or high school, are urged to enter the first day of school. While not an absolute rule, it is generally the case that most of the failures in school work are made by those who enter late and are therefore behind the rest of the class.

What the Man in the Moon Saw

By HAZEL SMITH

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

"I am sorry, Miss Marston, that you have decided to sever your connection with the observatory," said Professor Blythe, rather sternly. "But at your age I can understand that the isolation of life in these parts is not wholly congenial. In fact, if I may be permitted to say so, I have often wondered that you could endure a year in such a town as Emerald. You wish to get back to the world of men—er—I beg your pardon, Miss Marston, I didn't mean it in that sense."

Despite his five and forty years the professor fairly quailed before the young woman at the recollection of his faux pas.

"I mean, Miss Marston, that at your age one naturally desires congenial society."

"It isn't that, professor," answered the young woman, almost as embarrassed as the savant. "I have enjoyed my time here immensely. But I have decided to go."

"And tonight," said the professor reluctantly, "must be our last view of the heavens together, then. The legend that locates paradise in the celestial regions is a singularly fortunate one. One loses, in contemplating the heavens, the sense of the pettiness of earth. I can imagine no greater felicity than watching the stars with a congenial companion."

Then he broke off abruptly, for the second time he had been about to make a "break."

They were seated together in the observatory a few hours later. The moon was full and the clear atmosphere made observation extremely easy.

"I don't know how ever I shall complete the chart without you, Miss Marston," said the professor. "I must say that for a woman you have an extremely scientific mind. Most young women, looking at the moon, are, I am told, apt to take foolish and romantic notions. For instance, the outline of those areas which we call continents is foolishly compared with the face of a man, who is popularly considered, I understand, to watch over the sickening sentimentalities of lovers. As though the pure and exact science of astronomy could be compared with such idiotic philanderings! Do you not agree with me, Miss Marston?"

"Yes," answered Miss Marston in a low voice.

"Not that I have anything against love," Professor Blythe continued. "Were you ever in love, Miss Marston?"

"I can see that you weren't, and couldn't be," exclaimed Miss Marston, rising suddenly and speaking with something approaching anger. "Good-night, Professor Blythe."

An instant later she was gone.

"Miss Marston has gone, professor," said the elderly housekeeper when he descended from his observatory later that evening.

"Gone!" ejaculated the professor in surprise.

"Gone home to Baltimore by the night train," she answered, looking at him significantly.

But the work of mapping out the new craters proved unexpectedly dull. The young fellow who succeeded as his employee was utterly incompetent and quickly vanished. The professor bemoaned his ill luck to Mrs. Higgins.

"I'd give anything in the world to get Miss Marston back," he said. "She was the best assistant I ever had."

"Well, why don't you get her?" inquired the housekeeper.

"Get her!" ejaculated the professor. "Why, she wanted to go home; she was tired of the work."

Mrs. Higgins smiled sourly and thrust her elderly features within a few inches of the professor's.

"Do you know why she left?" she asked. "Because people were talking about you and her and thinking you were going to be married. No lady could stand for that."

"Bless my soul! No lady could stand for getting married?" inquired Professor Blythe.

"No, stand for talking about it when it wasn't so. There!" said the housekeeper.

The professor went away in deep thought.

"Do you think she would come back?" he inquired the next morning. "I mean if—if—"

"Try her," responded Mrs. Higgins, grimly. So that night a letter went off to Baltimore and, ten days later, Miss Marston appeared, resplendent in a new hat and gown.

"Well, I'm ready," she announced. "I feel very guilty to have left you, professor; that is, before we finished the craters."

They went up into the observatory together. His right arm, which seemed to have acquired an automatic motion independent of his control, gradually moved out until Professor Blythe found that it was encircling Miss Marston's waist.

"Do you think you could—er—marry me?" he blurted out. "You know, we must work on those craters together."

"Oh, bother the craters!" said Miss Marston. "Alfred, dear, I think I could, only—do you really want me for myself or for the work?"

"For yourself, darling!" exclaimed the professor with sudden rapture. "When I sit here and look at that old moon, why, he just seems to be watching us and telling us to be as happy as we can, the dear old fellow!"

And the man in the moon saw two people kissing behind the telescope.

FARM LIVE STOCK

RUNTS ARE LOSS TO GROWER

Questionnaire Shows Many Can Be Eliminated by Good Breeding and Proper Feeding.

(Prepared by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.)

The question, "Why is a runt?" has been answered by hundreds of live stock raisers who have filled in and returned questionnaire reports sent out by the United States Department of Agriculture. These reports—nearly a thousand of them—show that inferior breeding, poor feeding, and parasites are the three principal causes of undersized and underdeveloped animals. In fact, about 75 per cent of runtiness is traceable to these factors. All of these factors are under the control of breeders or stock raisers who by controlling them, can, in a large degree, eliminate runts, which, according to the reports, constitute 7 per cent of all farm animals.

The information gained from the reports is of much interest and value to live stock owners. Department specialists consider it dependable, for the replies have been received from a large proportion of farms on the accredited-herd list (having cattle free from tuberculosis), and most of the remainder are from farms whose owners are cooperating with the Department of Agriculture and state agricultural colleges in the "Better Sires—Better Stock" campaign. Those who answered the questionnaire are, therefore, interested in the control of disease and the improvement in quality of domestic animals, and, in general, are progressive live stock owners.

This Purebred Bull Was Badly Stunted When a Calf, Mainly for Lack of Suitable Food, but When Given Adequate Feed and Proper Care Developed Rapidly and Later Took First Prize in His Class at the State Fair.

In addition to the three principal causes of runtiness previously mentioned, the reports show that there are numerous other contributing causes. A summary of the opinions from 783 live stock owners shows that the principal causes of runty live stock are: Inferior breeding, 31.6 per cent; inadequate or unsuitable feed, 30.4 per cent; parasites and insect pests, 15.1 per cent; inadequate housing and care, 12.4 per cent; contagious diseases, 4.9 per cent; exposure, 2.9 per cent; accident, 1.0 per cent; other causes, 1.7 per cent. It appears that the breeding of well-selected purebred stock produces very few undersized animals, but that with scrubs—especially when inbred—the percentage of runty stock is high.

The reports show that runtiness is most prevalent among hogs, the average percentage reported being 10.1. This, moreover, includes a number of farms which reported no runts at all. One farmer who is breeding good, purebred hogs and feeding them a variety and plenty of feed, states: "We have not had a runty pig in two years, although the litters sometimes contain from 9 to 11 pigs each."

The results of the inquiry indicate that the size of an animal of good breeding at birth has but little relation to the mature weight where proper feed, care and management are provided. This is shown in a number of cases of successful hog raisers who report that lack of uniformity in fairly large litters has been overcome by proper feeding. A cattle breeder in Montana reports that proper feeding and care of a runty animal resulted in developing it to such a finish that it took first prize in its class at the state fair.

It appears from a summary of 929 reports that a comparatively small number of animals are born runty, and that most stunting of growth begins a relatively short time before weaning, or soon afterwards. More than 50 per cent of runty live stock appears during infancy or before weaning, according to reports, while 35 per cent shortly after weaning, and only 4.4 per cent at birth.

In reply to a question on the practicability of raising runts to market size 74 per cent of the replies indicate that it is not profitable, 14 per cent answered either yes, or yes with qualifications. Comments show that a well-bred animal, even though undersized, will develop into just as good an animal when it is given an equal chance. "With inherited runtiness due to inferior breeding," one stockman declared, "it does not pay. Other cases due to lack of proper feed may be raised with profit."

BEST MANAGEMENT OF COLTS

Animals Up to One Year Old Should Be Given About Three Pounds of Grain Daily.

Care should be given the colts, but few suggestions can be made. Colts up to one year old should have from two to three pounds of grain a day at two feeds, from one to two years old four to five pounds of grain, from two to three years [illegible]

MILLION IN MEXICAN CAPITAL

Population of City Is Estimated to Be Twice That of Ten Years Ago.

Mexico City, Mex.—The population of Mexico City has increased more than 100 per cent during the last ten years, according to recent estimates based on statistics, which fix the figure at approximately 1,000,000. This is far above the normal increase and the influx of persons is attributed as due to revolts. Housing conditions, as a result, are bad, and suitable dwellings are at a premium.

Badly Behaved Hens.

Little Janet, from the city, had been in the country only one day, but the rights of property owners and property renters were already firmly fixed in he mind. "Mother!" she called, excitedly, the morning after their arrival. "Mother! Just come here and look! There are somebody's hens wiping their feet on our nice clean grass."

PIRATES AGAIN SWEEPING SEAS

Theory Put Forward as Explanation of Disappearance of American Vessels.

PIRACY FOLLOWS GREAT WARS

Island-Dotted Areas of the Oceans Offer Lurking Places for Sea Rovers—Piracy Has Flourished Since Early Days of History.

Washington, D. C.—The theory that pirates are again infesting Atlantic waters has been put forward in connection with the grounding of the Carroll Deering and the mysterious disappearance of three other American steamships.

"An epidemic of piracy has followed in the wake of nearly all of the great wars. Even as recently as 1815 restless souls who had smelled the blood of battle and felt the intoxication of danger became loath to settle down into the peaceful ways of men and commerce, and chose the wide seas as an asylum because they refused to live under the law," says a bulletin of the National Geographic society from its Washington, D. C., headquarters.

Some Famous Pirate Bases.

"Beside the broad oceans which offered infinite chance for escape there have always been the island-dotted areas which furnish excellent lurking places from which these exponents of absolute freedom might take their quarry for examination and long division among them. The Greek Archipelago, the Barbary coast, the East Indies, the China shores and the Spanish Main, within the shadow of our own doors, have been pirate bases for centuries and given to the world a wealth of stories of breathless interest.

"In ancient times these sea robbers off the coast of Greece, Italy, and Asia Minor with their thousands of light, swift vessels, or 'sea mice' as they were called, 'taxed' merchant shipping so heavily that they lightly and rightly termed their base of operations the 'Golden Gulf.' They flaunted their black flag in the face of mighty Rome; which remained impotent against them until Pompey with almost unlimited resources at his command curbed their operations.

Pandora's Box of Piracy.

"Ferdinand and Isabella unwittingly, in their decision to drive the Moors from Spanish soil, let loose upon the world and particularly upon Spanish shipping, then at the height of its pride, a fearful horde of daring and unscrupulous avengers.

"In the early days of Moslem power one of the caliphs wrote to his general and asked him what the sea was like. The general answered, 'The sea is a huge beast which silly folk ride like worms on logs.' Consequently the caliph gave orders that no Moslem should voyage upon it, but they soon learned that they must conquer it if they were to hold their own among other peoples, and they subsequently furnished some of the most audacious and picturesque of the pirate figures.

The James Brothers of the Seas.

"Two of the most daring and ingenious of these were the Barbarossa brothers. 'Red Beard' terrorized the Mediterranean world from Constantinople to the Pillars of Hercules. The excellent harbors and the island hiding places made it possible for him to defy the fleets of England, Italy, Spain and Holland, to levy tribute on all the vessels that passed over the highway, to capture the richly laden Papal galleys bound for Rome in Moslem defiance of Christendom and chain the Christians to their oars. In 1510, at that time notorious and immensely wealthy, he changed the base of his operations to the island of Jerba, off the coast of Tunis, where the Fates ceased to smile so kindly upon him. After many hard-fought battles and vicissitudes of fortune he fell before the forces of Charles V of Spain near Tremizan on African soil. He had actually escaped, but upon learning that his faithful followers were close pressed he returned to die with them. The career of his brother Kheyr-er-din is scarcely less romantic.

"Piracy on the American coast among the French and Spanish navigators began before the days of the English colonists. Queen Elizabeth is said to have covertly countenaced as well as helped expeditions by buccaneers, and in the West Indies the trade restrictions placed by the various mother countries led to acceptance by many island governors of wares brought by navigators whom they knew to be free-booters and whose methods they could not afford to question.

Piracy Road to High Office.

"Perhaps the most unscrupulous and wily of the perverted sea kings was Henry Morgan of the Caribbees. He was a magnate, an indomitable ruler, a crafty strategist, and a commander of genius as well as a pirate par excellence. In fact he flirted with one danger after the other always to come out on top. He marched into Puerto Principe in the heart of Cuba and took it despite every resistance. He outwitted with uncanny cunning the officers at Porto Bello in Panama, one [illegible] an inestimable amount of gold and jewels, ingeniously employing a fireship against the Spanish to accomplish his escape when he was bottled up in Maracaibo lake. Finally he took and sacked the city of Panama. Then leaving his companions in the lurch, he slipped away at night with all the booty to Jamaica, ingratiated himself with the governor and was clever enough to get himself into the graces of the English king who knighted him and made him lieutenant governor of Jamaica for his 'long experience of that colony.'

"In our boyhood, stories of Captain Kid were frequent. The subject of the narratives was really a respectable sailor in the merchant service with a wife and family in New York when he was commissioned by the English king in 1690 with power to seize and destroy off the American coast all pirate ships. Having been given ships and crews to accomplish the purpose, he gayly set sail across the Atlantic, around the Cape of Good Hope to Madagascar and the Red sea to ravage East India waters and convert to his own uses his captures. Then he hied himself, so the story goes, to West Indian waters and buried his superfluous treasures before he finally went to Boston where he was captured, sent to England for trial, was executed and his body left to dangle in the wind for years as a warning to sailors."

COCKATOO KILLS BIG ROOSTER

Bird, at Outs With Barnyard Fowl, Wins Battle at Martinez, Cal.

Martinez, Cal.—A bitter battle was fought at the home of B. F. Rhine, local merchant, by a two-pound cockatoo and an eight-pound rooster.

The diminutive cockatoo proved that weight does not always prevail, for after taking a severe grueling for almost five minutes he grabbed the rooster in the windpipe with his sharp beak, administering the death blow.

According to Rhine, the pair had been at outs for several weeks. One morning the cockatoo was perched on a bush in the back yard when the rooster spied him. The heavyweight barnyard champion made a rush at his smaller enemy, spurs and beak.

The cockatoo, however, dug his claws into the rooster's breast, and pulling himself upright administered the death blow.

TRAPS SHREWDEST CRIMINALS

William Moulton Marston, a Boston lawyer and scientist, is shown here with his "lie detector." Three complicated pieces of machinery are used to detect deception in a witness or other subject.

First, the chronoscope, it measures in twelve hundreths of a second, the time the witness takes to answer questions. "Innocent" questions and questions connected with the case under consideration are verbally "shot" at him. He can't lie without hesitating a fraction of a second—and the chronoscope measures and records the delay.

Second—The kimeograph. This measures the respiration of the suspect as he answers questions and records it in traced "graphs" on a smoked cylinder. And a man breathes differently when lying (does a woman?)

Third—The spygmomanometer. This charts the blood pressure during the questioning. When a man is lying his systolic blood pressure rises rapidly in a "flying curve."

Scientists say that if a subject reacts "guilty" to all three tests his deception, or attempts at deception, is practically proved in the full scientific meaning of the word proof.

Wild Bears Endanger Lives of Tacoma Children

Tacoma.—While Tacoma is a city of 100,000 persons and old hunters say that it has been twenty years since a bear has been killed within the city limits, a meeting of the mothers and fathers held recently at Cedar Heights, a mile and a half from the heart of the city, revealed the fact that bears and other wild animals are lurking in the woods and they have petitioned for the erection of a school [illegible]

The Candle Snuffers Were Snuffed.

It is just about 300 years ago that candle snuffers used to be used, for at that time there was a great advance in the manufacture of the wicks which enabled the latter to burn more satisfactorily, and after that there was no use for the snuffers. The wicks of candles are put through a treatment on various chemicals before they are placed in the interior of the candle. This prevents them from smoking and from burning too rapidly.

ROAD BUILDING

ITALY WANTS BETTER ROADS

Experimental Institute Promoted for Study of Materials for Improved Highways.

The Italian Touring club has recently promoted an experimental institute of roads for the study of materials employed in the construction and maintenance of highways.

The objects of the institute will be to carry on laboratory experiments on the physical and mechanical characteristics of road materials; to help the progress of experimental technics relative to highway surfacing by reproducing and studying samples of pavements worn by traffic or deteriorated otherwise; to form a collection of material samples suitable for Italian road construction; to collect all descriptive and statistical matter appertaining to Italian roads; to furnish public bodies with useful advice relating to construction and maintenance of roads, and to forward by every other means the development and betterment of road work in Italy.

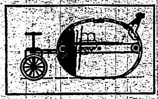
The institute publishes monthly reports of its proceedings. The institute is financed by annual contributions from the Touring Club of Italy, by an annual subsidy from the ministry of public works and by annuities, gifts and charges for material tests.

The institute is under the direction of Sig. Italo Vambone, formerly chief engineer of the province of Milan. More detailed information regarding the formation of this institute is given in a recent bulletin of the Permanent International Association of Road Congresses.

TRACTOR TO IMPROVE ROADS

Contraption Invented by Colorado Man Is Intended for Smoothing and Compacting.

The Scientific American in illustrating and describing a tractor for improving highways, the invention of J. Mosca of Rouse, Colo., says:



Tractor for Use on Soft Roads.

"The tractor is for use in soft roads, as for instance in snow or mud, wherein the tractor is driven by an endless belt traveling about a fixed element and engaging the ground on the under side of said element, and having means for preventing slipping of the belt, and wherein front wheels are provided for smoothing and compacting the roadway for the propelling means, and wherein cleaning means is provided for the belt and front wheels."

HARD ROAD IN NEW ZEALAND

Sum of $146,000 to Be Spent in Construction of Strip of Concrete Six Miles Long.

Approximately $146,000 is to be spent by the city of Wellington, New Zealand, in building a concrete road, 25 feet wide, to the suburb of Petone, which is six miles distant.

The new paving will occupy the center of a thoroughfare 100 feet wide which is now macadamized. Only vehicles, such as carts, motorcars and small motortrucks will be allowed on the concrete way. A special vehicle tax in addition to the present one, will be levied by Wellington, the proceeds of which will be devoted solely to the upkeep of this road. This tax applies to all motor-driven cars, and among them are also included motorcycles.

IMPROVEMENTS ARE TO COME

Establishment of Motortruck Trains Bound to Cause Reconstruction of Surfaces.

With the establishment of motortruck trains operating on a fixed schedule throughout the country improvements are bound to come. Not only will surfaces of the highways be rebuilt, but in many instances routes will be shortened to save time and money.

These improvements should be regarded as vital to the success of every community and as a necessary factor in the prosperous era before us. They represent benefits in which not a few individuals but the community at large will share.

Teach Highway Engineering.

Schools and colleges throughout the United States are to be enlisted in a national drive to teach the coming generation all about highway engineering, automobile transport, traffic regulations and safety.

GAME REFUGE ESTABLISHED

Rocksbury And Smiley Are Designated By State Game Commission.

At a public meeting held in the court house at Thief River Tuesday afternoon, following circulation of a petition asking that Rocksbury and Smiley townships be designated as a state game refuge, and no one appearing to oppose the move, Carlos Avery, state game and fish commissioner for Minnesota, granted the petition. Thus Pennington County now has two townships where game hunting is entirely prohibited even by residents owning land therein. Roseau and Polk counties have similar areas for the protection of game, and Mr. Avery believes all counties in this part of the state will have them before long. Prairie chickens, grouse, pheasants and probably quail will soon begin to increase in the two townships named in the order and it will be a pleasure to watch these birds as they fly unmolested from field to field and in the underbrush along the Red Lake river which flows thru both townships. Ring neck pheasants will be introduced into the refuge area next year by the commission. While not considered a game bird, the pheasant is noted for its beautiful coloring and will make a pretty sight should they increase to any extent.

Hunters should acqaint themselves with the boundry lines of the refuges as the penalty for hunting therein, even if equipped with a hunting license, is quite severe.

To East Grand Forks

The St. Hilaire baseball team will wind up the season on Sunday when they journey over to East Grand Forks to cross bats with the team at that place. The boys realize the fact that they are tackling a mighty fast team,—one which has cleaned up everything in its class, but East Grand Forks will be up against a team that is hard to beat. Everyone who can possibly do so, should accompany the boys and give them your loyal support. Remember that this will be the last game of the season.

A number of cars are already listed, and others are asked to be on hand Sunday morning at 8 o'clock when the cars leave by way of Red Lake Falls, Crookston and Fisher for the Forks

Run Down By Auto

The little son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Kolp sustained a broken shoulder blade and a fractured arm when he was run down by a car at Thief River Falls last Tuesday afternoon. The boy had been left in the Kolp car for a few minutes while his father went to get a package from one of the stores. The boy, seeing his mother across the street, attempted to cross over and was struck by a car which went over him with both wheels. He was rushed to the hospital where it was found one shoulder blade was broken, and his arm on the opposite side fractured just below the shoulder. At last report he was resting well and prospects appear bright for his recovery.

Stockmen Co-operate

Stockmen in the Northwest are cooperating in a plan to change movement of stock to market from one certain day each week so that shipments will arrive at different days. Under present plans all stock from northern Minnesota, North Dakota and parts of Montana arrive in St Paul on Sunday which results in a glutted market on Monday morning. Buyers take advantage of such a condition by forcing down prices, and the stockmen are making a determined effort to so arrange it that the yards will not be overloaded at any time thereby creating better marketing conditions.

Mrs. John Unis, who has been employed as school nurse at Omaha the past year, arrived here this week for a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. N. A. Nelson. She will leave Sunday to join Mr. Unis at Seattle after which they will go to Portland, Ore., where they will make their home.

Mrs. S. Amble, who has spent the summer with her daughters at Grand Forks and Minneapolis, returned home Friday accompanied by her grandchildren, Vivian Lang and Evelyn Brown, and a niece, a Miss Mc Caffrey from Grand Forks.

Miss Alma Engh is assisting at the postoffice this week instead of Miss Brevik.

Rev. Grimsrud autoed over into Clearwater county Monday. He returned Tuesday evening by way of Oklee, where he called on friends.

Rev. and Mrs A. Odegaard and little son came Thurday for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. And. Odegaard here, and with relatives at and near Hazel. Rev. Odegaard occupied the pulpit at the Norwegian Lutheran church here at evening services last Sunday.

Beat Holt 7 To 1

A very interesting game of ball was played here last Sunday when the Holt team came down to try conclusions with the locals. It was an airtight game without either side getting a score the first five innings. In the last of the sixth St. Hilaire managed to fill all bases without a man out. Singles and doubles came in quick succession, scoring six men. Holt got one score in their turn at the bat and the side was retired just as rain began to fall, so the balance of the game was called off with the score standing 7 to 1.

Take Many Prizes

Mike McAndress and R. J. Mc Kercher took practically all the prizes offered at the Pennington County Fair for the different classifications of Shorthorn cattle. The two herds mentioned have some of the finest strains in the country, so prize winning was not a difficult matter Both the McAndress and McKercher herds contain some young stock that would be a credit to anyone going into the pure bred stock business, or for building up a grade herd.

KEEPING THEM DOWN.

Secretary Hoover said at a banquet:

"One difference between Europe and America is that over there they like to keep you in your place—stationary, you know, while here we like to see a man rise—pauper to President, errand boy to millionaire, and all that sort of thing.

"The European idea is pretty well illustrated by the remarks of Muggins. Muggins, on his return from the pub one Saturday night, said to his wife:

"'I believe in manly pride and reasonable ambition, but when Sergeant Todd with his cork leg takes to carryin' a cane besides, it looks to me as if he was tryin' to climb out of the station what Divine Providence sunk him into.'"

CUBA IS FREE OF 'EL POTE'

Island Republic Rejoices at the Death of its Richest Millionaire.

CRUEL POWER OF WEALTH

Peasant Trod Down Millions as He Piled up Riches on Misfortunes of Others—Lived and Died a Brute.

Havana.—"El Pote" is dead and all Cuba rejoices. The peasant who became a millionaire many times over and used his wealth to wield a cruel power died as he had lived, haunted and hated, a victim of his own power. In 40 years he established a career lurid with tragedy, dark with sordid scheming, tremendous with both success and failure. A year ago reputed the richest man in Cuba, he came to a miserable end at his own hands, and almost his last words were that the wealth which cost him 40 years of unremitting toil to accumulate did not yield him one hour of happiness.

Jose Lopez Rodrigues was known to virtually every one in Cuba. He was a strange, sinister figure, and even in death he furnishes a remarkable example of what can be accomplished by the constant, ruthless application of power to a single task. Ferve el Pote (the pot boils) was his watchword, his motto, the rule of his sordid life, and it was from this that he came to be called "El Pote," the name with which millions became familiar. For years he thrived, at the expense of others. Then the fortunes of war turned against him, and, fearing the loss of all his ill-gotten gains, he committed suicide by hanging himself with a twisted sheet.

Filthy of Body.

Not more than five feet in height, "El Pote" had the powerful, thickset frame typical of the Gallego peasant. He wore the oldest clothes he could find and was foul of mind and speech and filthy of body.

Jose Lopez Rodriguez was born in Spain and emigrated to Cuba in his fifteenth year, fleeing from the hard conditions of the Gallego peasant life. In Havana for a while he worked with pick and shovel, but as soon as he could he abandoned such hard manual labor to work for an old second-hand book dealer, peddling the books from house to house. One morning his aged employer was found dead in his bed and young Lopez Rodrigues, who slept on the premises, was arrested on suspicion of murder, but after spending some time in prison he was released for lack of sufficient evidence to indict.

The widow of the murdered bookseller continued the business and Lopez Rodriguez, after his release from prison returned to his old employment. One morning the widow was found hanging in her room, but, no evidence being found to confirm a suspicion that there had been foul play, a verdict of suicide was returned. By the time the young employee had saved up some money and he bought the business.

Piles Dollar on Dollar.

Living upon almost nothing and working tirelessly, he steadily increased his trade and piled one dollar on another until with the passage of the years his fortune grew to respectable dimensions.

When, after the wealth of Cubans had been drained by three years of revolution and embargo, the American fleet blockaded Havana in 1898, "El Pote"—for by that time he had come universally to be known by his sobriquet—was able to acquire for cash large properties for a tithe of their value, and when the Cuban republic was set up he was a rich man among men who had been ruined. The latter were compelled to go to him for cash which he alone was able to lend. And so it came to pass that many of those to whom the government of the young republic was entrusted were his debtors—which he never allowed them to forget.

He secured a monopoly on all Cuban printing, for which scandal scores went to jail. Then he got control of one of the biggest banks and wrecked that, "borrowing" no less than $11,000,000 without security of any kind. He loaned millions, but always demanded from 50 to 100 per cent interest.

It is believed that after the payment of all debts the estate of Jose Lopez Rodriguez will be worth somewhere around $10,000,000, proving that it was not the fear of penury that drove him to end his life in the fashion by which his employer 40 years ago had died and which had marked the beginning of his own prosperity.

SELL THEIR BOBBED HAIR.

A proprietor of a well-known hairdressing establishment has disclosed the source of disposal of many of the locks that have been sheared off by observers of the bobbed hair fashion.

"You would be surprised," he said, "to know the number of women that sell their shorn locks after they have bobbed their hair. A number come to me every day. If it's long and of good quality I purchase it from them for a good price and manufacture hairdressing goods from it. Many of them trade it in for a free permanent wave. Good locks of natural hair used to be quite scarce, but since the bobbing fashion has come into vogue it has almost developed into a drug on the market. I have many opportunities every day to buy good hair."—Chicago Journal.

The Black Faced "Sleuths"

By HAROLD SINCLAIRE

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

"I tell you, Dave, that fellow, Ralph Tilden, isn't worthy of your sister," said Mart Woods.

"All you've got to do is to convince me of the fact," replied Dave Brierly, brother of Rose Brierly, the prettiest girl in Brampton.

"I can do that," asserted his companion positively. "I'll convince you, all right," asserted Mart. "The only thing is to convince Rose."

"He'll get his walking papers mighty quick if he is the wolf in sheep's clothing you say he is," observed Dave, smartly.

"Very well, I'll have some news for you in a day or two," promised Mart. "I'll show the rascal up in his true colors."

Rose had never given the least encouragement to Mart's advances. In fact, she had never known what love meant until Ralph Tilden had come into her life.

The latter was a manly young fellow, whom every girl might be proud to attract. He had been recently admitted to the bar; his first case in court had been the defense of a poor woman whose suit other lawyers had declined because she could not pay a fee. Ralph had won the case, its details got into the public prints, and he had earned golden opinions as to his professional ability and his philanthropic unselfishness.

All unconscious of the deft plots being woven to disturb their happiness, Rose and Ralph passed some pleasant hours. Mart came to Dave Brierly one day, elated and confident.

"Well, I've got the goods on that Tilden," he announced. "Twice a week he leaves his office at about eight o'clock in the evening. He never gets home until two in the morning. A fellow who does that regularly is up to something, isn't he?"

"As what, now?" challenged Dave.

"Well, carousing around. Let us be on hand tonight to take up the trail when he leaves his office."

"I'm agreeable, provided we can do it. I don't want to blunder myself into a laughing stock."

"Say," advanced Mart with spirit; "I've arranged a great plan. We'll disguise ourselves."

"How?" questioned Dave, dubiously.

It took a long time for Mart to induce his companion to join forces with him. His plan was a simple one. They were to blacken their hands and faces.

At length Dave agreed to the proposition. About eight o'clock that evening the young lawyer, Ralph Tilden, left his office.

A drizzle changed into a dreary pelting rain in a short time. Dave was glad when at last Tilden reached a two-story building on one of the lower strata streets of the city.

"Do you see!" cried Mart, exultingly, grasping the arm of his companion. "What did I tell you?"

"Why, what do you mean?" inquired Dave, staring blankly.

"That place—downstairs, saloon, upstairs the most notorious gambling house in the city."

"How do you know it is?" submitted Mart pointedly.

"Why—er—that is, I heard so—some one told me," explained Mart stumblingly.

In his excitement the speaker wiped his face with his handkerchief. Some people passing by stared strangely. Then a policeman came up, regarded them with a suspicious glare, and caught each by the collar.

"Ah!" he remarked—"disguising yourselves, eh? You'll explain this to the sergeant, my hearties."

Remonstrances were in vain. A hooting crowd followed the two seekers after "local color" clear to the station. No wonder! Where the rain had trickled and their careless hands had wandered, the faces of the unhappy captives were streaked in ludicrous patches of lamp black.

Somehow, they managed to get out of their trouble; somehow, too, the story got out.

"There seems to be something to explain," remarked Rose to Ralph the next evening.

"Ma chere, c'es que je t' aime," replied Ralph, enigmatically—"which means, how much I love you. In other words, a poor teacher of languages, too poor to select his preferable residence, lives in the building where our good friends located me. He has been teaching me French."

Which explained the seeming mystery and made fair, trustful Rose Brierly love him more than ever.

Why Kitten Chases Its Tail.

The amateur scientist has discovered why a kitten chases its own tail. The answer is simple—the kitten doesn't know the tail belongs to him.

When a cat is young, according to the A. S., there is little "feeling" in its tail. Unless the tail is stepped on or pinched the kitten feels no sensation. Therefore, when he sees that strange thing wagging he just naturally has to chase it.

When he catches up with it and bites it the kitten is surprised to find he is hurting himself. But it takes many bites to convince him that the tail is actually part of his body.

Highway Improvement

GOOD ROADS SAVE MUCH GAS

Trucks Use Twice as Much Fuel on Dirt Highfays as on One Built of Concrete.

That good roads cut the cost of gasoline more than 50 per cent is stated by "Freight Transporation Digest." A loaded two-ton truck was used in a test and in running 100 miles on an earth road consumed 17.3 gallons of gasoline, making an average of 5.78 miles a gallon. The cost figured at 25 cents a gallon was $4.33. The same truck was used on a concrete road and traveled the same distance on 8.49 gallons of gasoline, making 11.78 miles per gallon. The cost in this case, figured on the same basis, was $2.12. The net savings in cost of gasoline on the improved highway was therefore $2.21, or more than 100 per cent.

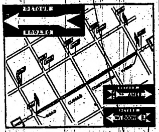
Statisticians could step in here and conjure a colossal sum to represent the savings in gasoline cost if all the highways of the United States were paved, remarks the Columbus (O.) Dispatch. They could, for instance, assume that all of the one-half million motortrucks in the country were two-ton trucks, and on this basis figure out a saving in gasoline costs equal to a couple of Liberty loan issues.

This enormous reduction in gasoline costs, coupled with the ability to handle loads with less tractional effort, has become one of the strongest arguments for good roads. The two tests cited in this instance show conclusively that poor roads are expensive to the farmer and merchant alike. The farmer who hauls with a motortruck is getting only one-eighth of the profit he could get and the merchant and inter-city freight truck operator are paying out twice what they should for gasoline and are getting only one-eighth of the profit they could get.

GOOD GUIDE FOR TRAVELERS

Arrows on Signs Mark Detours on Iowa's Highways and Point Out Proper Direction.

All detours around roads closed to traffic in Iowa are carefully marked for the guidance and protection of travelers. Signs are erected at intervals so that the proper direction can be taken with the slightest deviation from the regular route. The signs, as furnished by the state to the counties at cost, have a yellow arrow printed against a black ground, with the word "detour" above and below the arrow.



The blank sign furnished to the counties is shown in the upper corner, and as used in the lower. The larger illustration shows how the signs are disposed to guide traffic around a closed road.

When the sign has been placed with the arrow pointing in the proper direction, the "detour" below is deleted with black paint. The name of the place the arrow is pointing to, and other information, is stenciled inside the arrow.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

MATHEMATICS OF BAD ROADS

Farmer Solves Problem of Hours Lost in Making Trip Over Road That Is Deep in Mud.

If it takes a farmer, making a trip through the mud one hour and a half longer than when the roads are firm, how many hours are lost in a year if 1,000 farmers make an average of 12 trips a month? What would be the monetary loss if each 1½ hours lost be estimated at 75 cents per hour for each man and his team? This "two-in-one" proposition gave our old cat considerable trouble, but he finally worked it out thus: One farmer multiplied by 1½ hours multiplied by 12 trips, multiplied by 1,000 farmers, multiplied by 12 months equals 216,000 hours lost; going a step further, and multiplying 216,000 by 75 cents, you have $162,000 per annum lost to the farmers. Our old cat is now pondering how many road bonds this annual loss would float at 5 per cent interest.—Union Times.

The new modern home of the St. Hilaire creamery, which is reputed to be the finest and most up-to-date plant in this part of the state, was completed this week. Electrical energy for both power and lighting is now being installed. Such machinery in the old plant as can be used will be moved over last of the week, and it is expected the new outfit will be in operation soon. The building which has concrete and steel reinforced basement, and is otherwise of brick construction, is about as fire proof as it can be made. One fine feature is the woman's rest room in front which is equipped with conveniences such as is found in the most modern home. The whole plant is planned with a view of complete sanitation. A ventilating system keeps the air fresh and sweet in all parts of the building at all times. Concete floors in all rooms does away with the cleaning problem—it being an easy matter to flush floors with a hose.

Electrical power will operate all machinery that requires power. For convenience of employees, a toilet and shower bath has been installed in the basement. A part of the basement in front has been partitioned off and will be occupied by E. Patenode with his barbershop.

It would take a volume to make special note of the numerous conveniences to be found in the new building. It will be time well spent for anyone to go thru it after it is in operation to see the modern way of handling the product that has made this state famous.

MICHELET NAMED TO STATE OFFICE

Will Have Charge Of New Bureau To Handle State Owned Farm Lands.

Announcement was made Monday by State Auditor R. P. Chase of his appointment of Attorney Wilhelm Michelet of Thief River Falls to be state superintendent of farm lands, a position newly created to bring about more efficient handling of the state's land interests. Mr. Michelet will have charge of the care and sale of all state owned argicultural lands, with offices and staff at St. Paul.

Mr. Michelet is a graduate of the University Law Department of 1903. He was city attorney of Thief River Falls one term, County Attorney of Red Lake County from 1909 to 1910, Judge of Probate in this county from 1910 to 1919 and U. S. Commissioner from 1908 to the present time. He has the legal ability, training, experience, acquaintanceship and other qualifications that make him especially fitted to handle the many duties of the new position, and his appointment by Auditor Chase is a source of much satisfaction to his many friends in this vicinity who have long felt he had ability and vision to handle something larger and broader than a law practice. Mr. Michelet will move his family to St. Paul as soon as he can close his business affairs at Thief River.

Fred Hanson was down from Thief River yesterday looking after matters in connection with the garage.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Dickenson, Mrs. C. Swanson and children, who had visited here left Thursday last, accompanied by Miss Blanch Hoff, for Minneapolis.

Candles on Birthday Cakes.

The custom of placing candles on a birthday cake—one for each year—comes from Germany. The Germans placed a thick one in the center, called Lebenslicht, the light of life. Only he or she who declares his or her birthday may put out the light of life; it is unlucky if done by any other member of the family. The lights are symbols of life and its portions the years. For persons advanced in years one candle must do duty, as otherwise too many would be required.

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"I have decided to marry again, Miss Colburn."

Dr. Willard Cavanaugh, middle-aged, made the remark over the top of his newspaper when Harriet Colburn entered the living room after tucking the doctor's daughter, Thelma, aged six, and his son, Kenneth, aged four, in their beds.

It was somewhat of a surprise to Harriett, for when she left the hospital training school upon her graduation two years ago to accept a position in the doctor's household she had been given to understand the new service would be permanent. It was more than a surprise—it was a shock. For Harriett had come to love the children intrusted to her care.

Harriett was well past the twenty year mark and she was not beautiful. But she was a good, wholesome sort of girl, who took life seriously and paid strict attention to business. Her business was seeing that Thelma and Kenneth had the right food, fresh air, the proper kind of attire and the correct form and amount of discipline.

She had specialized in the care of children and had a way with them that few could hope to rival. Furthermore, she loved any and all members of the coming generation, and for that reason she had declined a tempting institutional offer and welcomed the chance to look after the Cavanaugh family. Before engaging her the doctor had watched Harriett and had become convinced that the salutary welfare of his progeny would be assured in her hands. Yes, the doctor's announcement was disappointment, but Harriett had been taught to control her emotions and was confident her dismay was not manifest when she sank into a chair across from her employer, who laid aside his paper and wiped his glasses.

"I thought I had better speak to you of my intentions some time in advance," he went on, "so that you could look for a position, although I understand you have been the recipient of several flattering offers during your term of service with me."

Looked in on the Sleeping Pair.

"That is true," said Harriett modestly. She could have an institutional position at the hospital any time she desired, and there were several places open similar to the one she now occupied.

With her face in the shadow she looked intently at the doctor, whose genial countenance was illuminated by the table lamp. This was the man whose children she loved, and at times she had felt she could go a step farther, if only she would permit it, and care— But, of course, that was out of the question. Harriett was a professional woman, and had long since abandoned all idea of marriage. Still, she was curious to know the name of the fortunate girl.

"You may be sure," the doctor went on, "that I will give you the best of recommendations. Fortunately for me the young lady who has consented to be my wife is also a graduate nurse—or will be shortly—so I feel my children will not suffer materially by the change in conditions."

When Harriett retired she crept to the children's bedroom and by the light coming in from the hall gazed with glistening eyes on the chubby, healthy faces pressed against two pillows in two little white enameled beds.

"The dears!" she breathed. "And to think I have to leave them."

The doctor sat for some time holding the paper before him, but heedless of any of the printed words.

"It's been pretty lonely," he sighed, "but Agatha will cheer things up. She's rather frivolous, but that's what I need. There's too much serious business in my life. Agatha will be good to the kiddies, too, I'm sure; probably not so efficient as Miss Colburn, but they need some one who really can be a mother to them."

The next evening Dr. Cavanaugh called at the hospital to take Agatha for an auto spin, knowing it was her "late leave" night. But she was not there.

"Agatha's gone to a dance," said a young girl, who was his fiancee's roommate. "Several young people went to Hazard's for the evening and Agatha was one of them."

The doctor frowned as he left the nurses' lodge.

"That's peculiar," he mused. "She doesn't seem to take the engagement seriously. But, then, she's young. She'll steady down after a while."

It was several days before the doctor saw his fiancee for more than a minute at a time. He called to spend the evening, and they sat in the nurses' parlor.

"Willard, why don't you dance?" she asked in the course of their conversation, which appeared rather strained. "I went with Frank Larkins to Hazard's the other night, and we had a wonderful time. Why don't you invite me some time?"

"I'm too busy," he returned, "and too tired after my day's work. I should think you would be, too, after slaving twelve hours in this workhouse; but of course you're young. I'm a little old, I guess."

She guessed so, too, although she refrained from saying it. Agatha did not love Dr. Cavanaugh. It was his income and social prestige that attracted her, and she did not look forward with relish to her coming martyrdom. There was a young man in a distant city whom she really loved, but he had no money.

The doctor was not especially pleased over the Hazard's party, but was diplomatic enough to keep silent on the subject. He kissed Agatha good-night and went home. His children and their companion had retired.

He went to the bedroom and looked in on the sleeping pair.

"You dear kiddies," he murmured; and just then the little girl opened her eyes and smiled at her father.

"Thelma," he said, "how would you like to have a mamma?"

Thelma yawned and smiled, and let one eye wink knowingly.

"All right," she chirped, "if it's Harriett you mean. Otherwise I don't care for one. Harriett's mother enough for me, and Kenneth, too. Say, pop, she's a dandy—and isn't she just beautiful, though?"

"Hm," observed the doctor as he made his way to his study. "Hm," he repeated, as he turned over some sheets of a treatise he was preparing. "Hm," he reiterated, scanning the pages.

He dipped his pen in ink, but got no further.

Before him rose a picture of Agatha, the girl to whom he was engaged.

"She surely is frivolous," he mused, "yes, too much so. I don't believe she loves me. I'm afraid it's my money. She's too young for me, anyhow.—Do I love her? I'm afraid not. I'm afraid I've just decided I should have a wife, and like a lot of men I picked out one that was beautiful—just beautiful, and not much else."

He replaced the pen in the rack and leaned back, interlocking his hands behind his head.

"Hmm, and so Harriett's beautiful. I never thought so, but Thelma says so, and it must be. Those children—how I love them—have a way of looking right through the face and into the soul, and it must be Harriett's soul that is so beautiful. And how those kiddies love her and she loves them, too. What have I in common with Agatha? Not a thing. And what have I in common with Harriett? The kiddies. Hmm, it's funny I never thought of that before. Really, it would be too bad to separate Harriett and the children; and she's such a capable girl, and lovable too. She must be lovable, for see how they love her. I wonder—wonder—would she have me? Hmm."

CONSIDERED ASTOR A FOOL

Bank Teller Had Poor Opinion of Wealthy Man, Because He Was a Hard Worker.

John Jacob Astor, head of that famous family of American bankers and financial giants, came near being a butcher. His father, old Jacob Astor, was a butcher in Germany, and wanted John to become one also. John refused, and came to America, but the hard times he had known as the butcher's son, a wasteful, beer-drinking butcher at that, had impressed upon him the value of a penny. He went into the fur trade and soon was on the road to wealth. His favorite story in after years was of his going to a bank with a note which the teller refused without the indorsement of someone known to him.

"I doubt if you could make good on this note should we demand payment," said the clerk, superciliously glancing over the plain attire of Astor.

"Would the indorsement of Mr. ——, or Mr.——or Mr.——be sufficient?" asked Astor naming the three richest merchants in town.

"Oh yes. Any one of them will do. They are all rich," said the teller, and then he added his estimate of the fortune of each.

"Well, my boy," said Astor with a smile. "I am worth more than all three of them put together."

"Then you are a bigger fool than I took you for," snorted the bank official. "You work harder than their meanest porters. We cannot loan money to fools."

But he did, and lived to laugh with Astor over the incident, years later.

Live Stock Facts

GREAT AID TO CITIZENSHIP

Intelligent Contact With Farm Animals Always Will Insure Quality in the Farmer.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In a message to the directors and members of the Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' association, Andrew W. Hopkins, until recently its secretary, makes the following statement: "It truly is a noteworthy fact that where live stock farming has attained a high standard of perfection there also has citizenship attained an equally high standard. An intelligent contact with farm animals always has and always will insure quality in the men; and a closer kinship with the better types surely brings forth fruits not yet compassed. General education, honesty of purpose, righteous living, culture, and religion have made the most progress in those communities in which intelligent stock farming has been most generally pursued."

Cattle and Corn—A Good Combination in Profitable Farming.

The United States Department of Agriculture has received a copy of Mr. Hopkins' recommendations for the future development of the live stock industry in Wisconsin. These recommendations point out that stockmen may well seek to increase their returns from live stock: (1) by discarding inferior animals, (2) by strengthening their organizations, (3) by cooperating when necessary in buying and selling, (4) by combating disease, (5) by supporting boys' and girls' club work, (6) by studying live stock and milk marketing, (7) by insisting upon more stabilized markets, and (8) working for the proper relation between the price paid the producer and that paid by the consumer.

IMPROVEMENT OF PUREBREDS

Virginia Farmer Gradually Helps Quality of Stock by Using Those of Superior Type.

Of 151 head of live stock on a farm in Shenandoah county, Va., all but five are of pure breeding, the United States Department of Agriculture is advised. Cattle and swine are the principal classes of animals kept.

In participating in the "Better Sires—Better Stock" campaign, the owner of these animals states that he castrates all inferior and surplus hogs, keeping none for breeding that can not be registered. "I castrated 26 in one day," he adds. "Three of these were good enough yearling boars to head most herds." By keeping only those animals for breeding which are of superior type, this farmer is gradually improving the quality of stock on his farm.

CONSIDERING OATS FOR HOGS

Not Worth While Unless Selling for Less Than One-Half as Much Per Bushel as Corn.

As a general rule it is not worth while to consider oats as a feed for hogs unless they are selling for less than one-half as much per bushel as corn. In case the hogs are being carried along rather slowly, however, or the tankage is extremely high-priced, it may be worth while to feed as much as a pound of oats per pig daily. In any case continue to depend chiefly on corn and tankage, feeding at least two or three parts of corn for each part of oats, and at least one-fourth of a pound of tankage per pig daily.

EWES NEED AMPLE EXERCISE

Excellent Plan to Scatter Rough Feed Away From Sheds and Let Them Pick It Over.

No matter how well they are cared for, if they do not have ample exercise the ewes are likely to have very unthrifty lambs. An excellent way to exercise the flock is to scatter out some rough feed away from the sheds every day, and permit them to pick it over.

FEEDING ROUGHAGE TO SOWS

Care Should Be Taken by Farmer That It Is Bright, Nutritious and Free From Mold.

Under no condition should a brood sow be fed upon any roughage which is not bright, nutritious and free from smut or mold. She does not relish or thrive on such inferior feed. It is very apt to cause severe digestive troubles and may lead to the loss of her litter.

POULTRY

GREEN FEEDS ARE ESSENTIAL

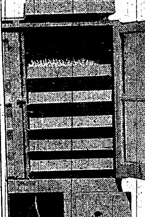
Good Varieties Are Sprouted Oats, Alfalfa Meal, Clover Hay, Cabbages and Mangel Beets.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Green feeds should be supplied to hens confined in small yards, and, indeed, to all hens during the winter. Free range or large yards kept in grass furnish ideal conditions for green feed. Smaller yards should be divided into two parts, used alternately, planting the vacant section two or three times yearly with a quick-growing green crop, such as rape, oats, wheat, rye, or barley. This method furnishes green feed and helps to keep the yards sweet and clean, which is an important consideration, poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture say.

Good varieties of green feeds are sprouted oats, alfalfa meal, chopped alfalfa and clover hay, cabbages and mangel beets. In ordinary cellars cabbages do not keep as well as mangel beets, and should be used up first. Cabbages may be hung in the poultry house; the beets are usually split and stuck on a nail on the side wall of the pen about a foot above the floor. Vegetables that have been frozen can be thawed out and fed to fowls, but do not keep well after thawing. Clover and alfalfa may be fed as hay, cut into one-quarter or one-half-inch lengths, or they may be in the form of meal.

Oats for sprouting are soaked overnight in water and spread out from one to one and one-half inches thick on trays having perforated bottoms, and put into an oat sprouter. Stir the oats daily until the roots are matted together. Keep the oats moist by watering them once a day. Artificial heat should be supplied in cool weather. Use a good grade of oats and allow a square inch of sprouted-oat surface for each hen daily, feeding these sprouted oats on the floor of the poultry house or in the yard. Feed at any time after the sprouts are well started, which usually takes from five to seven days. Keep the sprouter clean and spray it occasionally with disinfectant to prevent the growth of mold spores.



Oats Sprouter Furnishes Green Feed for Poultry Flock—Tray on Top Contains Sprouted Oats Ready for Feeding.

Keep oyster shell and grit before the hens all the time. These substances are an inexpensive but quite necessary part of the ration. Hens will eat about two pounds of oyster shell and about one pound of grit each in a year.

WINTER CROWDING IS ERROR

Big Mistake to Put Too Many Hens and Pullets Together in One House in Cold Weather.

A good many farm poultry raisers make the mistake of housing too many hens and pullets together during cold weather. Hens will lay as well if yarded and well cared for as if on free range; but they must not be crowded when they are confined.

If the hens are being fed and forced for eggs alone, get them into winter quarters in their pens early in the fall and do not change them about after they have been located. Introducing new hens into the laying pens always causes more or less confusion, and this decreases the number of eggs laid.

GREEN FEED OF IMPORTANCE

Not Only Assists to Supply Necessary Amount of Vitamines but Also Acts as Regulator.

With hens being confined to the pens it is important that plenty of green food should be given. Not only does it help to give the required amount of vitamines but it also is beneficial as a regulator. The nearer one makes the hens feel that they still have spring conditions, the better egg production can be expected. Cabbage, mangels, chopped and steeped alfalfa and such like make fine food for fowls.

Good Highways

BUILD UP CHEAP HIGHWAYS

Better Plan Than to Construct Most Expensive Highway and Let It Deteriorate.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

It is better to build a cheap road and keep it in good condition by adequate maintenance than to build the most expensive highway and permit it to deteriorate for want of care, say officials of the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Maryland, which has one of the finest systems of improved highways in the United States, if not the best, has consistently followed this practice. The originally improved roads in Maryland were comparatively inexpensive, costing only what the taxpayers were willing to pay for. The first few years the average cost was less than $10,000 a mile. In some cases the work entailed considerable grading and drainage, but in others it amounted simply to resurfacing the old turnpikes, which had already been graded and drained.

Improving an Old Roadway.

Generally the roads built at that time were macadam, 12 feet wide and 6 inches thick. Soon the width was increased to 14 feet. Later many were widened still farther, some very successfully, by adding concrete shoulders on each side of the existing macadam. This method of improving roads makes it possible for traffic to continue unimpeded on the road while the work is going on.

The macadam roads in Maryland have given very good satisfaction, but continuous care has been largely responsible for their success. The roads are constantly patroled and no hole of any size is allowed to go unrepaired. Material for patching is kept at convenient points along the roads for the use of the patrol man. From a relatively small investment in admittedly low-type road it builds up a better one from year to year, always conserving the bulk of the previous investment.

GOOD ROADS FOR EVERYBODY

State and Country Highways Built and Kept Up Will Connect Every Farm With Market.

For each dollar your state puts up for good roads, under certain conditions, Uncle Sam gives it another dollar. Such government aid for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, aggregates many millions. But then it stops, unless congress renews the grant, says Farm and Home. Nation and state should provide funds and plans for years ahead, so that a definite policy can be followed.

National trunk line highways built and maintained by the federal government, for the heaviest traffic and for military purposes, may render existing railways and their terminals sufficient for their purpose. State and country highways, also local roads, built and kept up by state and local authority, will connect every farm with every market.

Federal licenses for motor vehicles used in interstate traffic, based on weight, load capacity (which must not be exceeded), power and speed, will furnish revenue to maintain the national highways. Let a suitable part thereof accrue to the states, in addition to the state registry fee, and be used to keep up roads that receive the hardest wear.

The system must be worked out so as to build up the rural districts, not result in more favors to cities. Here is an important duty for our national agricultural organizations. Above all, no graft, no favoritism, no politics in it. Develop waterways and hydro-electricity along with good roads.

Removal of Snow.

Highway engineers in Illinois, Indiana, New Jersey, Ohio and Pennsylvania have made definite plans which will result in the main trunk lines being kept open from snow all winter.

Poor Shelter for Stock.

A straw stack is poor shelter for stock on cold, windy days. The cows and horses like to nibble around the stack on sunny days, but they must have good shelters for stormy days.

Return Steady Income.

Eggs and butter money is a source of steady income that mounts up big before the end of the year.

Make Use of Fanning Mill.

Get out your fanning mill and clean your seed grains. Clean seed pays.

HOME TOWN HELPS

TAKING CITY INTO COUNTRY

England Putting Into Effect Scheme Which Seems to Be Along Lines of Common Sense.

In England, instead of developing suburban communities, they are trying the scheme of taking the city into the country, to the benefit of the city and doing no harm to the country. Every new development in England will be practically a garden city, with plenty of open spaces, recreation grounds, golf courses, well-placed factories and industrial sections, and healthful residential quarters. The worker will have his patch of ground, and the usual smoke and grime of industrial communities will be nonexistent.

Town-planning schemes, many of them conceived before the new idea was generally adopted, were naturally much delayed by preoccupation during the years of war with more urgent matters and since the war by a housing scheme which occupied the full attention of the technical staffs of the local authorities. For the best results town planning should have preceded housing. Owing to the extreme urgency of the latter, however, it had to go forward first.

In all building schemes and proposals for improvement there is, occasionally, injury done to owners of property by the invasion of rights they have enjoyed for many years. Compensation in such cases is payable to the injured owner. No claim can be made, however, for injury to buildings erected, or improvements made subsequent to the scheduling of the area for town planning. And the further important provision is made: That authorities can claim one-half of the increase in value of property consequent upon the town-planning scheme. The government now realizes the commercial value of town planning and has no intention of creating private fortune by its intervention.

BURN UP UNSIGHTLY RUBBISH

Simple Contrivance Will Solve Many Problems That Have Probably Long Puzzled Housewife.

What to do with paper trash, rags that have outlived their usefulness, paper boxes and a hundred other things that accumulate and which are known as trash is a problem for every housekeeper. Yet it can be very easily solved. Trash can, of course, be burned in the kitchen range, provided it is a wood or coal burner, but it fills the stovepipe with soot, necessitating frequent cleanings, and makes an unpleasant smell and a great many ashes to carry out. As for making a bonfire outside, that can never be done unless some one watches it closely, and even then stuff blows about, littering the lawn, and the fire leaves an unsightly black spot.

A rubbish burner which is very inconspicuous can be placed in the back yard, is perfectly safe and answers in an entirely satisfactory way the question, "What shall I do with this?" which comes up every cleanup day either in the house or in the yard. It is nothing but a woven wire container. A piece of woven wire fencing long enough to make a circular receptacle two and a half to three feet in diameter would answer the purpose. Wire the ends together, making it circular in form. Make a cover for it by putting another piece of the woven wire over an iron hoop. Then weight it down, or anchor it in some way so that the wind will not blow it over or it will not be tipped easily.

Such a rubbish burner makes outdoor burning even on windy days safe and gives one a place in which to put rubbish whenever found. Wet things can be placed in it and left to dry out in the sun and then burned.

"Hedgers."

Hedgers are folks who never come out into the open. They are timid souls who would like to run something if they weren't afraid they might make a mistake. Sometimes these dwellers by the side have good ideas, but they are afraid to air them. They fear criticism and escape that incentive to better effort if they possibly can. So they continue living in the shade of the hedges and never doing anything to bring them into their best. And because of their peculiar thinking and habits they are not even harmless. Such folks need a fire in the hedge or something else that will make them bestir themselves, and do things worthy of men and the times.

Will It Help Trains Make Time?

A motor-car clock has been invented which never has to be wound up. It runs from power obtained from the batteries used for lighting the car lamps. So little current is required to work the clock that it uses in a year less than is required to light a four-candle-power lamp for an hour.

Quite the Contrary.

"I thought you said, dearest, that your father was difficult of approach."

"Didn't you find him so, dear?"

"No, I didn't. I hadn't been talking with him five minutes when he approached me for a fiver as easily as any man I ever met."—Boston Transcript.

Simple Clothes Worn By Milady

Clothes nowadays are very simple, it is true, writes a fashion correspondent, but the simplicity is a subtle one which should not be attempted by the amateur unless she has a gift for artistic drapery; not the sort of drapery that is at all complicated, but the kind achieved through a very few folds cleverly placed.

Beautiful fabrics play no small part in the dress of the hour. The plain, unbroken surfaces of the straight-line frock, which is the favorite of all models, offer a wonderful opportunity for displaying a beautiful material.

One frock is an excellent illustration of this. For it a gorgeous black and gold brocade was chosen. The mention of a handsome black and gold brocade brings with it a mental picture of a stiff, unpliable yet handsome fabric. Such a picture, however, does not represent this material. It is as soft and pliant as chiffon.

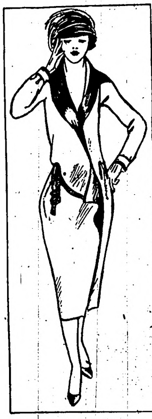
The idea of a costume consisting of a coat very much on the lines of the robe manteau or coat dress, and a frock that matches the lining of the coat, is still a prominent one in French fashions. It is unfortunate that this style has not been taken up to a greater extent in America. The Parisienne has used it for some time and its popularity with her shows no indication of being on the wane. It is a charming and a practical fashion, enabling a woman to be suitably and beautifully dressed for any hour of the day, which is especially convenient in this country where one's time is filled with engagements which frequently keep one away from home from early morning until evening.

Use of the Taffeta Sash.

With a costume of this sort the coat is of a light-weight beige-colored cloth lined with a beautiful shade of very dark brown taffeta. The brown taffeta faces the collar. The coat below the low waistline turns back in the form of a revers to show the lining. There is a loose sash of brown grosgrain ribbon.

The frock accompanying this coat is of brown taffeta that exactly matches the coat lining. It is made in straight effect, almost like a child's pinafore, with a plaited section attached to a deep square yoke. The plaits are not stitched, but merely pressed. The sleeves, which are short and in kimono effect, are cut in one with the yoke and are finished with plaits around the bottom to match the main portion of the dress. Although the frock is charming in its simplicity its best feature lies in a huge sash having two narrow panels attached to it. The sash wraps about the hips and ties in a big, puffy bow on one side. The panels fall slightly longer than the frock on either side. The removal of the sash leaves a straight-line plaited dress, which is unbelted. The whole idea is as clever as it can be and yet very simple.

Since a tailored suit always plays such an important part we are, of course, eager to know each season what the new suits are to be like. One of the most important things about suits is that the box coat is to be prominent. Many of these will be in very youthful effects with unbuttoned fronts, or with the fronts closing with one button. There are several straws blowing about in the wind of fashion which indicate that some rather unusual things may be done with coat closings. A very short box coat turned out by one of our best American designers closes in surplice style, fastening with one button on the left side just over the hips.

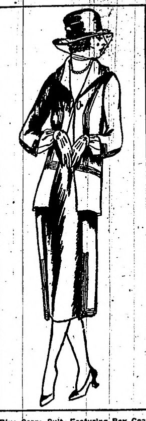


Long Coat of Beige-Colored Cloth Lined With Dark Brown Taffeta—Dress Made of Same Material as Coat Lining.

A practical blue serge suit, very much in the mode and at the same time rather conservative, has an interesting braid trimming in the form of a highly glazed black braid.

Ribbon Vogue Continues.

The vogue for ribbons is in nowise lessened. This would indicate that women are less changeable in their taste in dress than they are reputed to be. The continuation of ribbon trimming is not the only indication of this constancy. There are many others. A very striking example is the long life of the chemise dress. In fact, all that is best in present-day fashions shows very clearly that women like the suitable and beautiful in their clothes and that designs having these qualities are the only ones to which they adhere for any length of time. Many of the sudden changes in fashions have been due to the fact that the new things brought out, while striking, were quite unlovely.



Blue Serge Suit, Featuring Box Coat, Trimmed on Sleeves and Skirt With Glazed Black Braid; on Collar With Dark Blue, Dark Red and Light Blue Braid.

To be in keeping with the styles in dresses, which are stripped of all complications of design and fussy trimming, hats, too, must be plain. This is not a new idea in millinery, for it is a long time since we have seen anything of the pompous-looking hat at one time known as a dress hat. In fact, modistes might almost claim that couturiers have followed their lead in the matter of simplicity.

It is impossible to imagine the old-fashioned stays or boned corset with the soft outlines of the modern dress. A woman in the clothes of today has a freedom that never was enjoyed to such an extent in dress. The article which now serves in lieu of a corset is very much on the order of the waists worn by young schoolgirls. Even the old-time steel hooks that fastened the fronts are gone. Of two types of modern corsets one is of white tricot and fastens with buttons and buttonholes. The other corset has no fastening and is made entirely of wide elastic. It is known as a "step-in" corset. Certain reducing qualities are claimed for it.

The New Sport Togs.

The growing enthusiasm for sport clothes is not to be wondered at, nor is it surprising that women have taken to wearing them on almost all occasions regardless of the time and the place, for we have more variety now in this type of dress than in any other. Any inherent love of color of which one may be possessed finds expression in modern outing apparel. Then, too, there is an almost infinite variety of materials and styles in these.

It is a far cry from the stiff linen shirtwaist with mannish collar and the plain linen skirt to an ultra-modern sport costume, consisting of a crepe de chine skirt and flowered chintz coat. One of our best American designers has just created such a suit, with the skirt of beige silk and the jacket of black chintz gayly flowered in beige, orange and brown.

The developments in sport clothes are tremendously interesting to the follower of fashions. In the past there was no type of dress in which we were more slavishly conventional. Not even in our evening clothes was fashion more exacting. Happily, all this has passed into oblivion.

Among the dressed-up type of sport things is a three-piece costume, consisting of a straight dress and short circular cape. Although the dress is a one-piece affair, the waist portion is of gray crepe de chine and the skirt of bright green camel's hair cloth.

NEEDS OF CHILD IN WAY OF FOOD

Basket Lunches Require Thought and Care in Preparing to Prevent Sameness.

BREAD IS QUITE IMPORTANT

Simplest Contrivances Are Often Better Than Boxes With Compartments—Heavy Napkins Are Very Convenient in Packing.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

What went into Jane's and Jack's lunch boxes at your house this morning? Were they filled the last minute with what remained on the table after breakfast, supplemented by some of last night's meat and pie, or were the boxes filled with dainty, appetizing lunches, carefully planned and packed?

Growing children have certain special needs in the way of food. Like grown people, they must be supplied with what is necessary for health and strength, but in addition, they must be given, also, what is necessary for growth.

Even when children eat all their meals at home, it is no easy matter to see that they are properly fed; but when they eat part of their meals at school, the difficulty is much greater. It is not easy to make food attractive and to keep it clean when it must be packed and carried in a lunch basket.

Filling Lunch Basket.

The basket lunch is harder to plan and to prepare than the lunch at home. To begin with, many foods cannot be included in it, either because they are not good cold or because they cannot be conveniently packed or easily carried. This leaves fewer foods to choose from, and extra care is necessary to prevent sameness.

Paraffin paper, parchment paper, jelly glasses, and the paper cups and containers for moist foods are a great help in packing lunches. With these helps, foods can be kept from sticking to each other, and such half-solid foods as sliced raw fruits, stewed fruits, custards, and cottage cheese, can be carried in perfect condition.

Good Bread Important.

The quality of the bread used in the basket lunch is especially important because it is commonly served in the form of sandwiches and is, therefore, to be considered, not only as a food in itself, but also as a means of keeping other much needed foods in appetizing and attractive condition.

Off to School, Lunch Box in Hand.

Variety in breads, too, is more important at this than at other meals, because of the danger of monotony. Wheat bread, whole-wheat bread, corn, rye, or oatmeal breads; nut, raisin, and date breads; beaten biscuit, rolls, crisp baking powder or soda biscuit, toast, zwiebach, and crackers may be used in turn to give variety. Rolls hollowed out can be made to hold a large amount of sandwich fillings, which is an advantage at times.

Packing the Lunch.

Many kinds of lunch boxes, pails and baskets are now on the market. Because they can be washed and scalded easily; the simplest boxes and baskets are often better than the more elaborate ones with compartments in which to keep dishes, knives, forks and spoons. With the increase in automobile travel, well-constructed boxes and baskets which can be easily cleaned have come on the market with compartments for keeping food hot or cold and for holding liquids. These are, of course, suitable only for children who ride back and forth, and particularly suitable where several lunches are put up in one household.

The precautions which must be taken to keep the foods clean and safe differ with circumstances. In dusty seasons they should be wrapped particularly well. In hot weather, the use of soft, moist foods in which molds and bacteria are most likely to grow rapidly, should be avoided. Although chopped meat moistened with a dressing of some kind makes a good sandwich filling, such foods are less desirable in hot weather than slices of meat, peanut butter, or other foods less liable to spoil.

Paper napkins, or the somewhat heavier paper towels of much the same size are very useful for packing lunches, and, like paraffin and parchment paper, may now be obtained at a low price, particularly if bought in rather large quantities. If no provision is made in the school for serving lunches, an extra napkin, either of paper or cloth, should be put in the basket, to be spread over the school desk when the lunch is eaten. Napkins can be made out of cotton crepe at a cost of a very few cents each. The crepe may be bought by the yard, and should be cut into squares and fringed. Such napkins have the advantage of not needing to be ironed.

In packing the lunch basket, put at the bottom the things least likely to crush, and wrap the sandwiches, etc., into neat parcels, not all in one.

OLD DRY-GOODS BOX AIDS BREAD MAKING

Contrivance Holds Dough at Right Temperature.

Kerosene Lamp or 16-Candlepower Light May Be Used for Heating—Shallow Pan of Water on Lower Shelf Keeps Air Moist.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In making bread the housekeeper often finds it difficult, particularly in the winter months, to hold her sponge or dough at the right temperature so that it will rise in a shorter period of time. She will find a sponge box or bread raiser a great help in keeping the proper temperature. Such a box can be made from an ordinary dry-goods packing box. The following directions for making one are given by the United States Department of Agriculture in Farmers' Bulletin 927, "Farm Home Conveniences."

A box 26 by 20 by 20 inches is a convenient size. About 10 inches from the bottom of the box a shelf made of slats or strips of wood rests on cleats fastened to the sides of the box. A second shelf is placed 4 inches above the lower one. The shelves can be removed when cleaning the box. Below the lower shelf a sheet of galvanized iron, slightly wider than the shelf, is inserted. It is curved in order to make it slip in and stay in place securely. This prevents scorching of the lower shelf when a lamp is placed below and also helps to distribute the heat more evenly. The door is hinged and fastened with a thumb latch or hook and staple.

Several small holes are bored in the lower and upper parts of the sides and in the top of the box to promote circulation of air. A cork, bored through the center to admit a straight thermometer, is inserted in one of the holes in the top of the box. A Fahrenheit chemical thermometer that registers as high as 100 degrees can be used. Such a thermometer may be ordered through a hardware dealer or directly from an instrument dealer.

To avoid all danger of fire, the box should be lined with asbestos or tin when a kerosene lamp is used for heating. A 16-candlepower light will heat the box well, or a small, inexpensive night lamp may be placed in the bottom. A shallow pan of water should be put on the lower shelf so that the air will be kept moist.

The bowl of sponge or pans of dough are placed on the upper shelf. The temperature of the box should be kept as near 86 degrees F. as possible (80 to 88 degrees F.) when bread is made in the quick way. If a sponge is set overnight, 65 to 70 degrees F. is the better temperature until the dough is made in the morning, after which the temperature may be increased to 86 degrees F. The temperature in the box may be varied by raising or lowering the flame of the lamp or by using warm or cold water in the shallow pan.

GOOD TEST OF CHILD'S DIET

If Children Are Strong, Well Developed and Free From Ailments, Food Is Suitable.

The health and appearance of children are a good test of the wholesomeness of their diet. If they are strong, well developed for their ages, free from ailments and full of energy and ambition, one may safely say their food agrees with them. But if they are listless and ailing, or not so well developed either physically or mentally as they should be, and if a competent physician finds that there is no special disease to account for these bad symptoms, a mother may well ask herself if the food is right, and if not, how she can make it so.

STILL TO MAKE BATTERY WATER

Simple and Inexpensive Contrivance Can Be Put Together by Any Handy Mechanic.

DETAILS OF CONSTRUCTION

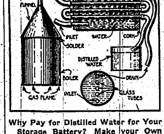
Boiler or Tank in Which Water Is Turned to Steam Is Made of Quart or Half-Gallon Can or Bucket With Rolled Seams.

With the greatly increasing use of storage batteries in automobiles the demand for pure or distilled water has increased. It is unnecessary to purchase this water or pay the garage man to put it in the battery. With this simple and inexpensive still any one can distill water for refilling the batteries as the occasion requires.

As shown in the illustration accompanying this article, the boiler or tank in which the water is turned to steam, is made of a quart or half-gallon can or bucket with rolled seams. Be sure they are not soldered at the bottom. The top of the can or bucket is open. Procure a large tin funnel that will fit over the top of the can and then solder firmly and tightly in place as shown. This completes the boiler.

The condenser consists of three lengths of glass tubing each 12 inches in length. These tubes pass through a larger tube or a piece of iron pipe or brass tube of sufficient size to accommodate the tubes with some space between them. Fit a large cork into each end of the large pipe or tube and pass the three glass tubes through the corks. Then into each cork fit a short length of glass tube, one at the bottom, the other near the top of the large tube. Connect the free ends of the long tubes with rubber tubing so that they will form one long continuous tube.

Fill the boiler half full of clean water by submerging, and place it over a gas flame until the water comes to a boil. Connect the top of the funnel with one free end of the glass tube through the condenser by a short length of rubber tube. Slip a short length of rubber tube over the other end of the condenser tube and run it to a clean glass receptacle. Pass a small stream of cold water through the condenser by connecting the lower of the short glass tubes with a hydrant the upper to a drain. Just open the faucet enough to keep a small, easy stream of cold water passing through the condenser and out of the drain hose.



Why Pay for Distilled Water for Your Storage Battery? Make your Own Still.

The steam from the boiler passes through the condenser and becomes condensed in the tubes chilled by the flowing water. The pure distilled water is collected in the receptacle as shown.—Francis Dashiell, in Popular Science Monthly.

Emergency Patch.

An ingenious motorist recently discovered that his roll collar, from which the starch had been scrubbed out, made an excellent blowout patch, which carried him home after his tire had failed on the road.

TO PREVENT CREEPING RIMS

Excellent Plan to Tighten Lugs by Degrees Thereby Avoiding Too Much on One Side.

When the shoulders on the wheel designed to hold the demountable rim become worn, the rim and its tire will creep on the wheel. Naturally this makes the valve stem project at an acute angle and if continued long enough may cut it off. If the valve stem is held firmly by means of a cap the strain falls upon the lower portion of the stem and that part of the inner tube which surrounds it. In this connection it is well to call attention to the need for tightening the rim lugs by degrees. If they are fully tightened one after the other and all the way around the wheel there is apt to be too much space on one side of the wheel and too little on the other. The proper way is to tighten one lug and then the one nearly opposite it and so on.

FOOT COMFORT FOR DRIVERS

Device Gives Smooth Action on Accelerator and Prevents Choking of Engine on Bad Roads.

A readily adjustable heel support for the foot which operates the accelerator is constructed so that it may be moved forward or backward. Its use is said to give a smooth action on the accelerator and prevent choking of the engine on rough roads, wearing of the heel of one's shoe, wearing holes in the floor mat and wearying of the leg.

LOCATING SQUEAK IN SPRING

All Doubt Can Be Removed by Running Car Over Smooth Road With Ruts in It.

Most everyone knows the noise of a squeaky spring, remarks a contributor of American Motorist.

"But if you doubt whether it actually is that," he continues, "run your car over a smooth road which has a few small holes now and then. Drive over these holes at the rate of about 15 miles an hour. If your car squeaks only when you go over the holes, and rides silent while on the smooth parts, you may be sure that your springs need oiling."

REMOVAL OF TIGHT WHEELS

Simple but Often Effective Expedient Is to Loosen Nut and Drive Car Short Distance.

Sometimes one needs to remove a stuck wheel on an occasion when no wheel puller is available. As a simple but often effective expedient, jack up the wheel in question, put the car in gear, and after removing nut, key, etc., shake the wheel back and forth, pulling at the same time. If this does not work replace the key, drive car a short distance. This method will loosen a wheel even when a puller won't budge it.

VALVES ARE NOT REVERSIBLE

Can Be Inlet on Engine Operated by Piston's Suction Downward—Exhaust Is Mechanical.

An automobile valve cannot be either an inlet or an exhaust. It can be an inlet only on the engine, operated by the piston's suction downward. The exhaust valve must be forced open against pressure of the burned gases in the cylinder and therefore must be mechanically operated.

"SILENT POLICEMAN" IS UNIQUE

The lamp throws a green light similar to those used along the Panama Canal. The White House can be seen in the background.

The Governor's Hard Fight

By FREDERICK CLARKE

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

Nobody except the governor knew that he had a double—not even the governor's wife, who knew him, perhaps, better than anybody else. The two men resembled each other so completely that it would have been impossible for their most intimate acquaintances to distinguish them.

From his earliest years Governor Haines had been engaged in a constant fight against this man.

The executive mansion was totally unguarded. In that sleepy little capital town formalities had not come into favor. The double strolled quietly across the lawn, entered the mansion and made his way to the governor's office. His secretary, nodding at his desk, bowed to him, unconscious that this could be anybody but the Governor Haines he knew.

"Mr. Searles has telephoned that he will be here in half an hour, sir," said the secretary. The double nodded, passed into the executive chamber and sat down at his desk.

That he had an intimate knowledge of all the governor's business was evident, for he began scrutinizing papers and emptying pigeon holes and reading memoranda. But he was awaiting the arrival of Searles, the state boss, with ill-concealed impatience.

The secretary looked in. "Mr. Searles is waiting to see you, sir," he said.

The state boss entered. "You have called with regard to that railroad franchise bill?" he asked.

Searles cleared his throat and nodded.

"Now, Governor Haines, we have threshed this matter out, among others, for a long time. I have tried to rally you with the better interests of the state, but I have failed. I have pointed out to you that—I may speak plainly?"

"Surely," answered the double, smiling, and something in the double's expression sent new hope into Searles' heart.

"You got my letter, governor?" he asked, his lips parting in a wolfish smile. "Well, it amounts to this. If you don't sign that bill you won't have the renomination next year. That, of course, goes without saying. But I'm going to do more than that. I'm going to drive you out of public life altogether. Twenty-five years ago, when you were a young man, you were involved in a scandal. You know what I mean. The people of this state won't stand for anything of that kind in their chief magistrate. Will you sign the bill or will you be exposed?"

"The man who was involved in that scandal was not I. It was a double of mine," thought the double.

"Let us come to the point, governor," Searles said. "It's no use shilly-shallying or beating about the bush." He drew a paper from his pocket bearing the governor's signature. "This is your obligation for five thousand dollars," he said. "May I tear this into pieces and throw them into your waste basket?"

It was strange, the extraordinary revulsion that came over the double. He stretched out his hand impulsively and took his pen, and in large letters wrote at the bottom of the bill "vetoed." He held it out toward Searles.

Searles seemed completely nonplussed. For a whole minute he stared at the vetoed bill. Then he got up and stretched out his hand.

"Governor Haines," he said, "I think the world of you. You have won the fight and I'm man enough to recognize it. You'll have the people on your side now—and I don't kick against the pricks. You've bested me and you'll have the entire Searles organization with you when we offer you the nomination."

He shook Haines by the hand and walked slowly out of the office, shaking his head.

He must have dozed, for some minutes later, when he looked up, he saw his enemy before him. Governor Haines was looking steadily at him, but he evinced no surprise.

"Let's fight this thing out right now," he said. "I've finished with you. I shall never temporize with you again."

"If you had told me that twenty-five years ago I should never have troubled you at all," answered the double, humbly, rising.

Governor Haines did not answer him, but watched him leave the room. Each man has his double, his worse nature. But when he has conquered him the double becomes a harmless wraith, transparent as a breath of marsh air that is dispersed in the sunlight.

Americans in British Universities.

Large increases are reported in the number of American students attending British universities. Last spring there were 180 Americans at Oxford, 30 at London university, 37 at Cambridge, 21 at Edinburgh and others at the smaller universities. It is expected that the next term will bring a big increase in the number of American students.

Nothing to It.

"A man is paying a fool election bet by standing on his head in the middle of the street."

LIVE STOCK

NOT WISE TO OVERLOAD CARS

Death or Injury of Animals Means Heavy Loss to Shipper—Temptation to Crowd Is Great.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

It makes quite a difference in the profits of the farmer stock raiser whether he obtains 8½ cents per pound for his hogs as meat or from ½ to ¾ cent per pound for them as dead hogs and soap-grease material. Which of these prices he obtains depends upon how the animals are loaded in the cars. Many shippers, either through ignorance or in an effort to save a small amount of freight, overload or improperly load their live stock when sending it to market, and thereby run great risks of sustaining serious losses through crippled or dead animals, say specialists of the bureau of markets, United States Department of Agriculture.

With freight rates at their present levels there is a strong temptation to economize on this item of expense by crowding a few more animals into an already well-filled car. Representatives of the department, however, who see thousands of carloads of live stock unloaded at the great central markets, are of the opinion that if farmers and stockmen could see the condition in which much of the live stock reaches the stockyards they would be impressed not only with the folly of overloading, but also with the absolute necessity of taking every precaution against injury and death of the animals while in transit.

Overloading is one of the commonest, and at the same time most serious, mistakes made by the inexperienced or careless shipper. It seems such an easy matter to crowd just a few more animals into a car, and the fact that once in a great while an overloaded car will go through without serious mishap seems to urge the shipper on to tempt fate just once more. The wise shipper, however, will have nothing to do with this false economy, say specialists of the department. He will lay down a hard and fast rule to load only as many animals in the car as can ride comfortably, and from this rule he will not deviate.

The chances of loss through overloading are greater in warm weather than in cold. Temperatures may be such at the time of loading that the animals are fairly comfortable, but before they reach market the weather turns suddenly hot, with the result that anywhere from one to 12 animals suffocate. This is particularly true of hogs. The shipper should remember that stock cars frequently stand in freight yards completely hemmed in by trains of box cars. Under such circumstances, if the animals are crowded in the car and the weather is hot, overheated and dead animals are almost certain to result.

Dead Stock on Unloading Docks.

Another mistake frequently made is to load mixed stock without proper partitions. When two or more species of live stock are shipped in the same car they should generally be kept separate by building strong partitions. This is particularly important when large animals are shipped with smaller ones.

It has been found that shipping live animals any considerable distance is an undertaking always fraught with some risk. This risk, however, may be materially reduced, in the opinion of department specialists.

The exact number of animals that should be shipped in a car, naturally, varies with the size of the car, the size and kind of animals, the length of haul, the season of the year, and weather conditions. There can be no variation, however, in the general rule that the animals should have sufficient room to be reasonably comfortable, and that the car should be so partitioned that large animals cannot trample the smaller ones, and that aggressive and quarrelsome animals cannot injure those with a more quiet and timid disposition.

Even at the present comparatively low price of livestock a single dead or crippled animal invariably represents a substantial loss, and in many instances wipes out the profit on the entire shipment.

GOOD ROADS

FIND ASPHALT BY ACCIDENT

Discovered in Switzerland and Used for Purpose of Extracting Valuable Bitumen.

Asphalt, though covering thousands of miles of roads in all countries, was discovered quite by accident. In the middle of the last century it was found in Switzerland in its natural state, and used for the purpose of extracting the valuable store of bitumen it contained. In time it was noticed that pieces of rock which fell from the wagons, and were crushed by the wheels, formed a very fine road surface when half melted by the heat of the sun.

An experiment was made and a road of asphalt laid in Paris. It was so successful that the new road material became adopted through all the big towns of Europe.

All sorts of materials have been tried since, from rubber to seaweed. It is very likely, in fact, that in the future the streets of our big cities will be paved with some form of rubber mixture which will be practically noiseless. Very extensive experiments have already been carried out with such a mixture.

In New York several streets are paved with steel, and a steel road has been in use in Valencia, in Spain, for the last 20 years. Perhaps the most curious material for a road is seaweed. This compressed into solid blocks, is used to pave the streets of Baltimore. These seaweed blocks are bound with wire and dipped into boiling tar before being put to use.

DESTROY ROADSIDE WEEDS

Because—

1. They act as centers of weed infestation for adjoining fields.
2. They may be carried for many miles by passing vehicles and animals.
3. They harbor harmful insects and plant diseases.
4. They create insanitary conditions.
5. They are unsightly.

Methods for destroying roadside weeds, approved by specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, are:

Weeds Along Roadside Harbor Injurious Insects and Various Plant Diseases.

By—

1. Mowing twice a year while they are in full bloom, usually in June and August.
2. Utilizing the roadsides for growing hay.
3. Grazing with tethered animals.
4. Converting weedy roadsides into lawns.

GRADE ALL ROADSIDES SO THE WEEDS CAN BE CONTROLLED.

WIRE MESH GOOD FOR ROADS

British Army in Egypt Used Chicken-Wire in Building Temporary Routes in Sand.

The British army in Egypt has used chicken-wire in the construction of roads.

Loose sand was smoothed and leveled and then covered with chicken-wire, which was firmly pegged down.

The passage of troops or motor transports seemed to affect the road very little, while the passage of animal-drawn vehicles damaged the improvised road badly. However, it was possible to make repairs quickly and the road was easily kept in good condition.

Of course this wire-mesh road was purely a temporary expedient for the military. The old Romans still hold the palm as the champion road-makers of the world. Many a foundation of the roads they made is still in use in Europe, the surface alone being modern.

Bad Roads in Way.

POULTRY

GOOD FENCES ARE REQUIRED

Fowls Running at Large Destroy Gardens and Flower Beds—Confine Them in Yards.

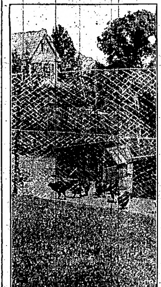
(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Confine the back-yard flock; otherwise the hens will stray into neighbors' yards and gardens, where they may cause damage and are almost sure to cause ill feeling. The yard should be inclosed by a board or wire fence. Wire fencing is preferable, as it is cheaper and the hens are less likely to fly over it, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. If cats prove troublesome where one is raising chickens, it may be necessary to cover the top of the yard with wire also. A board should not be used at the top of a wire fence, as this gives the hens a visible place to alight and tends to teach them to fly over.

A 5-foot fence is high enough for most conditions, but if the hens show a tendency to fly over such a fence the flight feathers of one wing should be clipped. Leghorns need a 6-foot fence. The larger the yard which can be provided the better the hens will do, as it not only gives them greater opportunity to exercise, but also makes it possible to maintain a sod on the yard. In most cases not enough land will be available so that a sod can be maintained.

If the yard is fairly large, it can be divided into two parts and green crops, such as oats, wheat, rye, or Dwarf Essex rape allowed to start in one yard while the hens are confined to the other. The green crops should be sown very thick, and the following quantities will be found satisfactory for a yard 25 by 30 feet: Wheat, 2¾ pounds; oats, 1⅛ pounds; rye, 3¼ pounds, rape, 5 ounces. When the growing stuff reaches a height of 3 to 4 inches the hens can be turned upon it and the other yard be similarly sown.

Where it is inadvisable to divide the yard it is possible to keep a supply of green stuff growing by using a wooden frame 2 or 3 inches high covered with 1-inch-mesh wire. A frame made of 1 by 2-inch lumber, 6 feet long and 3 feet wide, with an additional piece across the center to support the wire when the hens stand on it, will be found desirable for a small yard. A part of the yard as large as this frame is spaded up and sown, the frame placed over it, and the material allowed to grow. As soon as the green sprouts reach the wire the hens will begin to pick them off, but since they cannot eat them down to the roots the sprouts will continue to grow and supply green material. This frame can be moved from place to place in the yard, and in this way different parts cultivated.



Common Poultry Netting Makes a Very Satisfactory Fence.

The yard should be stirred or spaded up frequently, if not in sod, in order to keep it in the best condition. This will not only tend to keep down any odors which might arise, but also allow the droppings to be absorbed into the soil more readily, and, therefore, keep the yard in better condition for the hens.

Although it is necessary to keep the hens confined to their yard most of the time, it is sometimes possible to let them out where they may range upon the lawn for an hour or so in the evening when some one can be at hand to watch them or at certain seasons of the year to allow them to run in the garden plot. This will be enjoyed greatly by the hens and will be very beneficial to them.

CONTROL INTESTINAL WORMS

Best Way Is to Change Ground Upon Poultry Run, Especially if Fowls Are Crowded.

Changing the ground upon which poultry run is the best means of controlling intestinal worms in poultry, because the worms or eggs of the worm will stay over in the ground from one season to another, especially if the poultry is overcrowded.

LOCAL SCHOOLS OPENED TUESDAY

Teaching Corps Complete On Opening Day. Record Attendance.

The St. Hilaire public schools opened Tuesday morning after the annual summer vacation, with a complete teaching staff in both high and grade departments. A total of 153 pupils were enrolled the first day. Of this number 98 are in the grades and 55 in high school. The primary department broke all records for beginners, there being 10 new faces in that room Tuesday morning.

The high school teaching staff is as follows: Principal, W. S. Hatcher; Ass't. Principal, Fred Wesloh; English, Miss Owen. The grade teachers are: 7 & 8, Miss Mabel McGinity; 5 & 6, Miss Mildred Peterson; 3 & 4, Miss Lyla Shuster; Primary, Miss Olive Patterson.

With schedules mapped out beforehand, all clases are now busily engaged in the routine that will occupy them for the next nine months.

Moving Delayed

Moving day at the creamery has been delayed another week and possibly more owing to the non-arrival of a samll electric motor which operates the water pressure system in the new buildng. Everything else has been tested out and found perfect, but there will be no moving until the water system is ready, that being a very important item.

The Hebrews called the Red sea the Yan Suph, or sea of weeds of sedge. The Red sea is really red, due to a minute bright red plant, a kind of seaweed so small that 25,000,000 can live and thrive within a single cubic inch of water.

SPUD HARVEST IS UNDER WAY

Yield Promises To Be Very Good This Year, Shipping Starts Soon.

The potato crop in this part of the country, which wil undoubtedly be, from a financial point of view, one of the best revenue producing crops put in this year, is now being dug. While digging has not become general as yet, enough has been taken up to warrant stating that the crop will be excellent. Practically all the larger producers are members of the Produce Association and their potatoes will be sorted, and sacked according to standards adopted by that organization, and will be shipped thru the Minnesota Produce Exchange. Pennington County spuds found a ready market last year owing to their excellent quality, and it is only a question of time until they become a staple crop in this country.

Meditation Indispensable.

The constant habit of penning devout books is so indispensable that it has been termed the oil of the lamp of prayer. Too much reading, however, and too little meditation, may produce the effect of a lamp inverted; which is extinguished by the very excess of that aliment, whose property is to feed it.—H. More.

M., in book 8 of Mortgages on page 638; which default has continued to the date of this notice by the failure and neglect of said mortgagor to make payment of the sum of One Thousand fifty-five dollars ($1055.00) principal and interest by said mortgage secured, which by its terms became due and payable on June 1st. 1920. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of $1055.00 with interest thereon at 5½% per annum since June 1st, 1920, and the further sum of $449.92 taxes paid by the undersigned on July 27th. 1921, with interest thereon at 6% per annum since July 27th 1921, being a total due at date of this notice of One thousand five hundred seventy-nine dollars seventy-five cents $(1,579.75); and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. ONE-MAN ROAD GRADER PAYS Profitable Plan for Farmers in Community to Get Together and Purchase Implement.

Once two teams of horses and at least two men used to be required to level and grade roads. Now we have the one-man machine, which does the job in half the time and never gets tired. Like all modern devices of this nature, it is, of course, driven by gasoline.

The single operator manipulates all the levers that control the cutting blades and also takes care of the engine. All the controls are placed at his elbow.

If you live in a community where it is the custom for each man to contribute his share of labor toward keeping the roads in condition, it will pay the men of the neighborhood to get together and purchase a one-man road grader and reduce the time and labor ordinarily necessary for this task.—Popular Science Monthly.

BETTER ROADS HELP BABIES

Farm Is Made More Accessible to Doctor and Nurse—Danger in Travel Is Reduced.

It may seem a long way from good roads to better babies, and yet the two are closely connected.

America has a great rural population, throughout which babies are being born every day.

These babies and their mothers need care, the visit of the nurse, the services of the physician, often of the surgeon, and how are they to have it if between lie miles of road impassable alike to automobile or buggy?

Of what use is the little hospital at the county seat if the woman whose life depends upon its care cannot be taken there swiftly and comfortably?

What difference does it make that the town physician may be a very wizard at treating diphtheria, if long before he can arrive at the farm the little throat has been closed by the deadly film, or the little heart stopped by the depressant poison?

Medical and surgical honors are generally claimed for the city—when as a matter of fact the country doctor is often possessed of a skill as complete as his heart is big.

Make the farm accessible to the doctor and nurse, make the hospital and the health center accessible to the farm. Nature and skill will do the rest.—Concord Monitor.

THIN ROADS ARE EXPENSIVE

Ordinary Rock Surface Under Motor Traffic Coming in Next Few Years.

MacAdam was years ahead of his age and years behind this one. The builders of the Appian Way knew more about building a road for a motortruck than MacAdam, strange as it may appear. It is the general opinion among road builders—an opinion greatly quickened and altered by the war—that the light stone road, be it surfaced or oil treated in what way you will, is not the road to build in the face of an avalanche of motortrucks that is coming in the next few years. The motorcar brought oil to the road as a necessity. The water bond, which worked so well with iron tires and iron shod hoofs, is useless against the suction of the pneumatic tire. But the oiled stone road that holds the 3,000-pound car with ease will not carry the five-ton truck—and last.

The railroad builders have found that for heavy traffic it pays to use the heaviest steel rails, the finest wood for ties and the best broken stone, and plenty of it, for ballast.

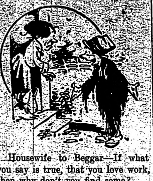
HIS INTERPRETATION



Housewife to Beggar—If what you say is true, that you love work, then why don't you find some?

Beggar—Oh, madam, you know love is blind.

MAY GET REWARD FOR OLD DEED

A man for whom the government has been looking for 33 years, to pay him a reward for the capture of Chief Joseph of the Nez Perce tribe of Indians, may have been found in Beaverton, Ore. His name is William Bahr and he is engaged in business in Beaverton, where he has been a resident for more than 18 years. He may now receive the $500 reward offered by the government back in 1888, if government records bear out the claims made for Bahr by his friends. It was early in 1888 that Chief Joseph scalped a white woman and two children. Word of what had happened got to government officials and a reward of $500 was offered for his capture, dead or alive.—San Francisco Chronicle.

LOVE AND RED HAIR.

The first day I left my bed at the hospital a lad with a broken leg, whose room was just across the hall, invited me to visit him. I was a shy girl, but loneliness made me friendly, and we had a jolly time. Then one day a freckle-faced, red-haired girl visited him and I was heart-broken. I passed a sleepless night, bringing on my fever again, and I was kept to my bed for two days more. Then I overheard nurse telling the doctor that my new friend had been growing worse all day, too. I made a mad dash for his bedside, and there we discovered the cause for our relapses to be our mutual love. Now the sight of red hair disturbs me no more, for he is my fiance.—Exchange.

THE LAST WORD.

"Undoubtedly," replied Senator Sorghum. "Women in politics have taught some of those old-time bosses who thought they could always have the last word a lesson."

NO BEST BREED OF POULTRY

There Are Three Classes Specially Adapted to Production of Eggs and Meat.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There is no best breed of poultry. That, at least, is the opinion of men in the United States Department of Agriculture who have been studying the business for years, and have had experience with all varieties of all breeds in America. To go among your friends and ask for advice about the kind of chickens to start with would be about as productive of conflicting views as if you asked for help in buying a motor car or a typewriter. Every man has his likings, and some have good reasons for them, but in the end the beginner will have to be the judge; wherefore the opinion of the department specialists will be about the best guide: Keep only one variety of breed, and select the breed that suits your purpose best. Be sure of one thing—have a standardbred male at the head of the flock. Such a bird will improve the quality of the stock materially. A mongrel male will produce no improvement.

These are the reasons: Standardbred fowls produce uniform products which bring higher prices.

Standardbred stock and eggs sold for breeding purposes, bring higher prices than market quotations.

Standardbred fowls can be exhibited, and thus compete for prizes.

Eggs and stock from mongrel fowls are not sold for breeding purposes.

Mongrel fowls are not exhibited in poultry shows or expositions.

General-purpose breeds are best suited to most farms where the production of both eggs and meat is desired. The four most popular representatives of this class are the Plymouth Rock, Wyandotte, Orpington, and Rhode Island Red.

All these breeds, with the exception of the Orpington, are of American origin. They are characterized by having yellow skin and legs, and lay brown-shelled eggs. The Orpington is of English origin, has a white skin, and also lays brown-shelled eggs. You can get a detailed description of all fowls of American origin in Farmers' Bulletin 806 on "Standard Varieties of Chickens. I. The American Class," which may be had upon application to the Division of Publications, United States Department of Agriculture.

A Flock of White Plymouth Rocks—A Good General-Purpose Breed.

The Mediterranean or egg breeds are best suited for the production of white-shelled eggs. Representatives of this class are bred largely for eggs rather than for meat. Among the popular breeds are Leghorn, Minorca, Ancona and Andalusian.

An outstanding characteristic of the egg breeds is the fact that they are classed as nonsitters; that is, as a rule they do not become broody and hatch their eggs. When fowls of this class are kept, artificial incubation and brooding usually are employed. Farmers' Bulletin 898, "Standard Varieties of Chickens. II. The Mediterranean Class," tells about this class.

Langshans, Brahmas, Cochins, and Cornish fowls belong in the meat breeds, rather than for eggs, and although classed for meat are sometimes kept as general-purpose fowls. They are all heavier and larger than the egg breeds, or those of the general-purpose class, and lay brown-shelled eggs. Farmers' Bulletin 1052, "Standard Varieties of Chickens. III. Asiatic, English, and French Classes" describes the breeds in this class.

Fowls for breeding purposes should be strong, healthy, vigorous birds. The comb, face, and wattles should be a bright red, eyes bright and fairly prominent, head comparatively broad, short, and not long or crow-shaped; legs set well apart and straight, plumage clean and smooth.

The beginner in poultry will be careful to have a home ready for his flock before he gets it. Farmers' Bulletin 889 contains suggestions, plans, and directions every poultry keeper should have. The Division of Publications will send it upon request.

INFERTILE EGGS KEEP BEST

Are Preferred for All Purposes Except Hatching and Can Be Kept for Longer Period.

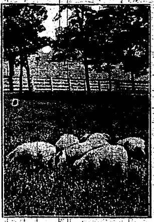
TEMPORARY SHEEP PASTURES

Results of Experiment Made by Department of Agriculture on 30-Acre Field in Maryland.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

On a 30-acre field in Maryland, used by the United States Department of Agriculture to test the carrying capacity of temporary pastures for sheep, sufficient pasturage was produced to furnish an average of 505 days' grazing on each acre, for a mature ewe. This is equivalent to about two sheep an acre for a season of 250 days, or two and one-half sheep for a 200-day period.

This pasturage is much more than could be obtained from perennial grass grown on land of the character and value of that used in the experiment, the department sheep specialists say, but not more than can be obtained from the best blue-grass pastures. Good land used for such a succession of temporary pastures should produce from 50 to 100 per cent more pasturage than was obtained in this instance.



Lambs on Pasture in Maryland.

In such a system as the one under trial there is not much choice of crops to be used in different months. It is chiefly necessary to make sure of having one crop ready when the preceding one is finished. All the crops used in 1919, the third year of the experiment, stimulated a good flow of milk in the ewes, produced good growth in the lambs, and, after weaning, put the ewes in good condition for fall breeding.

The ewes and lambs were all purebred Southdowns. Some of the ewes raising lambs received a half-pound of grain each daily until May 10, and 22 head of ewes in a fall-breeding experiment received a light feed of grain during September and October. All the lambs were kept for breeding purposes and were fed some grain throughout the summer. In calculating how far the feed actually produced would go for grown sheep it was considered that a lamb ate one-fourth as much as a sheep until July 1, and after that one-half as much. A total of 520 hours' work for a man and a team was required for plowing and seeding the 60 acres used in 1919.

Under the conditions of this experiment fall-sown wheat and spring seedings of oats and peas sown together at the rate of 1½ bushels per acre have been most satisfactory for grazing in spring and early summer. Soy beans are ready for grazing about the middle of July and furnish most of the feed until October. In November fall-sown wheat and rye have been used most, though late seedings of corn and velvet beans were used in 1919 for the first time on 1½ acres that had received an extra top dressing of manure.

The number of days of grazing from one acre of each crop in 1919 was as follows, calculated on its pasture value for one mature ewe:

	Days.		Days.
Rape	332	Cowpeas	219
Soy beans	313	Alfalfa	332
Oats and peas	319	Barley	278
Wheat	309	Rye	190

TYPES OF BABY BEEF COWS

Three Important Factors Should Be Kept in Mind in Making Selection of Breeders.

In selecting cows from which baby beef is to be produced, three very important factors should be kept in mind:

1. The cows should have at least a fair amount of beef blood. Purebreds are not necessary, but two or three crosses of such breeding is essential. Cows with a preponderance of dairy blood will not do for the production of baby beef.

2. Cows best suited for this type of breeding usually weigh 900 pounds or over in thrifty breeding condition. So long as early maturity is not sacrificed, the heavier cows are the most suitable for baby beef production. Size of frame rather than weight should govern in selecting cows which are to be used for this purpose.

3. The cows used to produce baby beeves should produce enough milk to keep the calves fat and growing without much additional feed up to weaning time.

In addition to these three factors [illegible]

Alfalfa is a native of Asia, but has been cultivated in Europe since before the time of Christ. The Spaniards introduced it into South America, until some time between 1850 and 1860, when it was brought to California. Since then it has become the most extensively cultivated forage crop in the United States.

OLD STORY, WITH VARIATION

This Time, Fright Is Alleged to Have Turned Man's Hair From Black to Red.

Medical reports contain many instances in which the hair of a person subjected to shock or extraordinary fright has turned white, but the hair of James R. Spadden of Spring Garden is turning red, as the result of a harrowing five minutes with a vicious bull. Prior to this occurrence Spadden's hair was coal black, according to a Pittsburgh dispatch to the Philadelphia Record.

Several days ago while crossing a field he was attacked by a bull which he had not seen until it was too late for him to reach safety. The animal lowered its head and charged. Spadden side-stepped the beast, whose anger was intensified. A second time the bull rushed at him, this time knocking its victim down. The bull tried to gore the prostrate man, but Spadden managed to escape its lunges. He was rolled about on the ground, however, and severely bruised.

Spadden's strength was almost exhausted and death seemed certain when the owner of the bull, armed with a pitchfork, ran to his aid and drove the beast away. About 48 hours later a few red hairs were found scattered among the mass of black ones that covered Spadden's head. The number of these has increased until now the two tints are about evenly divided.

The Old Clock-Maker

By DOROTHY WHITCOMB

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

The old clockmaker was seated in his office, his head upon his hands, his elbows on his desk, pondering. He occupied a tiny office in an old-fashioned part of New York downtown, and he sat there for a great part of each day since he came to America fifty years before, bringing with him the skill of twelve generations of Swiss clockmakers. Walser's clocks never varied by more than five minutes a year. Great, old-fashioned grandfather's clocks they were, and because the modern fashion is for cheap and gaudy things, he sold only to a few old-fashioned customers, and his whole stock was stored in the small warehouse and workshop at the back of his office.

And he had driven Ernst, his only son, his only child, out of his home forever. Ernst was the last of the Walsers, and with his action he had effectively cut himself off from all the generations that were to come. How foolish his quarrel had been! It was about a girl whom Ernst wanted to marry, and because he had not told his father all about it old Walser had taken umbrage.

"Who is she?" he asked angrily. And Ernst answered that she was a domestic servant. Then the old man's anger flared out, for the Walsers traced their descent from princes and Walser had mixed so little with his kind that the old traditions lingered.

Old Walser turned to his son.

He pointed to an old clock which had ticked away the hours minute by minute ever since he had brought it to America.

"Ernst," he said hoarsely, "that clock was made by my father for his serene highness the prince of Lutterling. My father was once engaged to marry the prince's daughter. She died, but the match was never considered unequal. The Walsers have been a proud old family, though they are clockmakers. And you—you—you are going to marry a servant.

"Well, marry her, but from this moment you are no longer a Walser. I disown you by the memory of my father." He pointed still to the timepiece. "When that clock, which my father made in 1833, goes wrong by as much as ten minutes in a day, I will ask you to come back to me," he said. "Now go!"

And Ernst went.

The old clock never varied by as much as a minute a day. Its melancholy tick was wearing the old man's heart away. He moaned in his misery as he sat at his desk. How gladly he would have had his son back, servant wife and all! If only he had not been so hasty!

A good boy, too—Ernst had always been a good son to him. He swept his fingers across the glass, and the clock ticked heavily in answer.

And then a wonderful thing happened. A sudden whirring sound was heard, and the hands began racing furiously. And then they stopped and the old clock stood still at half past four.

That was the precise time at which Ernst put on his hat and left the house.

The old man fell back in his chair and stared in astonishment at this phenomenon.

Presently, when curiosity overcame his terror, he opened the case and peered in. And swiftly enough the cause was revealed. Wedged tightly into the mechanism was a clockwork mouse.

Walser drew out the mouse and looked at it. Years before he had brought that mouse home for his son Ernst, in the days when he was a baby, playing about the floor of the nursery. The child must have placed his toy inside the old clock and forgotten all about it.

Walser rose up solemnly and put on his hat. He turned to the clock and his voice was choking with emotion.

"I know now," he said, "that this is a judgment and a miracle in one."

Ten minutes later he arrived at a dingy, shabby house, and made his way up to the top floor and knocked.

A comely young woman came to the door.

"You are—?" queried Walser.

"I am Mrs. Walser," she answered in a very sweet voice. "You have business with my husband?"

"You are my son's wife?" shouted the old man. "Why, I thought—I thought—"

And suddenly he flung his arms about her and drew her to him and kissed her. And at the audible sound Ernst came to the door, looking shabby and thin, but with fire in his eye and fists doubled to repel this assault upon the sanctity of his home. Seeing his father he halted dead.

"Come here, my boy," cried the old man. "It's all forgotten—the clock ran down. Come with me and I will tell you all about it."

WOULD EMPLOY MANY IDLE MEN

Highway Department Has Plan For Reducing Number Unemployed In State.

The Minnesota Highway Department is sponser for a plan which has for its object a reduction in the number of unemployed in the state. The plan consists of persuading congress to double the 1921 federal highway appropriation which would enable the state department to enlarge their plans for extensive highway improvement work during the fall and winter. Co-operation of the public spirited men and women of Minnesota is asked to put the plan thru. Thousands of men are now idle in the state, and unless employment is found for them, there will be much suffering for them and their families. A great deal of road work can be done during late fall and winter at less cost than at any other time of the year. Roads are badly needed and it is now an opportune time to build them. The employment question, instead of getting better, is growing worse as the fall advances. Clubs and other organizations can help matters greatly by circulating petitions to be sent to the Minnesota delegation in Congress urging them to take immediate action.

Married At St. Paul

Word was received here recently of the marriage of Miss Gertrude Hooper, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W Hooper of this city, to Mr. Gustav Hofgren, the ceremony taking place in St. Paul on Sept. 5th.

MUCH POWER SAVED.

In the system known as "regenerative braking," used by the latest types of electric locomotives, the mechanical power developed by the train as it runs down-grade is "regenerated" and returned as electricity to the trolley, to be used by some other train, instead of being wasted in heating brake-shoes and wheels, as happens when the air-brake is used.—Science Service.

STOVE OF NOVEL DESIGN.

A decided departure from the ordinary line of stove design is represented by a new heater. It is modeled on the lines of a phonograph cabinet and is painted in similar colors. An internal drum of cast iron, inclosed within an outer casing of light metal, holds the fire. Air is admitted to pipes from the outside, through louver openings in the casing sides. These pipes cross the open fire where the air is heated and consequently floated outward into the air. Hard or soft coal may be used in the stove.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

LUCKILY HE COULD LAUGH.

In our town there lives a fat man. He walks with a ponderous padding tread, holding his arms from his sides and pawing the air with each in turn at every step. I was standing on the street corner talking to a friend one evening when he passed, and in a spirit of mischief I mocked his funny gait behind his back. But as I followed him I entirely forgot the corner arc light until I got on the wrong side of it, when my ridiculous shadow ran far ahead of the fat man and showed my every movement plain as day. I forgot, that is, until he turned around and I saw what had happened.

Be it said that luckily for me he possessed the fat man's proverbial good humor.—Exchange.

With little more experimenting along the line of determining the best kind to raise, it will not be long before growers will be in position to market melons outside the home field.

Fires Under Control

Forest fires which caused considerable damage in the vicinity of Mc Grath and Whitepine, and which destroyed the latter town, were brought under control last week by a soaking rain. Fire fighters were seemingly powerless earlier in the week due to sudden wind changes which, in many instances, rendered their work useless.

A dance is advertised to be given at the Imperial hall Saturday evening after the show.

Nels Person is building a fine barn in the rear of his residence on north Water Street.

E. H. Stephens returned Thursday from So. St. Paul where he marketed a carload of stock for the Farmers' elevator.

The auction sale at Felix Anderson's takes place Friday this week. Mr. Anderson and family expect to leave for California after the sale.

Picturization of Harold Bell Wright's famous book "The Eyes of the World" will be shown here next week. See adv. on another page for dates and particulars.

A Hen That Walked Backwards

By WILLIAM FALL

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Why, Colonel Travers sends 500 miles for a plate of strawberries costing a dollar a piece, if he takes a notion," was the way Gregory Jones usually descanted upon the immense wealth of the proprietor of Hillsdale hall. "They say, too, that he has banknotes bound up into books in his library."

The Travers family lived in grand style. They were pleasant, liberal, and spent a good deal of money with the village storekeepers. There was, therefore, considerable regret when it was known that the hall had been sold for a seminary.

In Hillsdale hall Gregory was very much interested. He was given many an odd task well paid for by the colonel. The matron of that lordly establishment was Mrs. Susan Morton. She was a buxom widow, cheery but all business.

On the day that the hall family moved, Gregory brushed up his best suit and started for the hall with a determined, though anxious face. He expected to find Susan there, and he did—seated on the top step of the porch. The house had been divested of all its furniture and moving vans were visible down the road. Susan had the keys of the house in her hand and looked lonely.

"You've been crying, Susan," observed Gregory, sitting down beside her.

"Yes, I'll admit it," confessed Susan, making room for him. "It grieves me to leave such a kind, liberal family."

"Susan," said Gregory, with longing eyes, "you know my feelings towards you?"

"I do, Gregory," acknowledged Susan, frankly, "and feel honored by them. It is useless to talk about that, though, just now. All I have is the little plat of farm land my mother left me. You will have to wait till you get some steady position."

"And then, Susan?' pressed Gregory, anxiously.

"Why, the day you can make a start to stock up the farm I will be glad and willing to go into life partnership with you."

"It's a good, sensible woman you are," declared Gregory, warmly. "I'm going to deserve you, and then I'm going to have you."

"I hope so," returned Susan with an encouraging smile. "Oh, Gregory, would you do a favor for me?"

"You don't need to ask that."

"The colonel sold off all his barn stuff, the chickens among them. There's a poor witless hen the purchasers wouldn't take. They said it was crazy and would annoy the other layers. They've left the homeless thing behind. Won't you take care of it?"

"I will," promised Gregory, "and think of what a kind-hearted woman you are every time I look at it."

Gregory located the lone chick on its roost, found a bag, said good-by to Susan and took his prize home. The keeper of the village general store was just getting ready to put up the shutters for the night when Gregory rushed into the place.

"Hello!" hailed the storekeeper, "going to move?"

"Pretty nigh that, Silas," replied Gregory. "See here, I want a little accommodation of you."

"What is it, Gregory?"

"I want to borrow $25."

The storekeeper proceeded to his old iron box of a safe. Gregory became immersed in reading the glaring poster on the wall of a circus exhibiting 50 miles away.

"Just in time," he said to himself. "Thank you, Silas, I'll pay you back all right," he added aloud.

There was great gossip as to the mysterious departure of Gregory.

A week later there came a letter. "Dear Sweetheart Susan," it read, "I've ordered that farm outfit and I'm coming home. Get ready to begin that life partnership this fall—beautiful sunsets, harvests and all!"

Susan gave a scream of delight as she opened the door one morning and found Gregory on the doorstep.

"Gregory," was her first word as they were seated on the sofa, "what does it all mean? Did some one leave you a fortune?"

"Better than that," replied Gregory buoyantly—"a chance to earn every dollar I've got. It was the chicken, Susan."

"What chicken?" asked Susan forgetfully.

"The one you asked me to care for, Susan, that was a wonderful fowl. No more crazy than you or I—only queer."

"How queer, Gregory?"

"Well, it walked backwards. Think of a hen that walked backwards—the only one in the world. I went straight to the city where a circus was showing. A side show was interested. Not that a chicken that walked backwards was so strong an attraction of itself, but with the tattooed boy and the trick porcupine it made a big draw. A showman offered me $1,000 cash for the curiosity, so I'm here with the money to stock up that farm. What do you say, Susan?"

"That you are a husband worth waiting for," replied Susan tenderly.

Headed for Trouble.

"Did you congratulate the groom?"

"Naw. Would you congratulate a fellow just going to the dentist's chair?"—Detroit Free Press.

TO MOTHER NATURE FOR REST

Woods and Hills Offer the Only Recuperation That Can Be Really Permanent.

When you hear of some great man's collapse, you can usually put it down to staleness. He has kept at the desk until nature refused to refresh him. In a fit of despair he has done the rash thing.

Staleness is responsible for many a heartache. Mental control has lost its clutch and skidded into irresponsible animal instincts. Men have seen the drift and felt unable to swerve from it. They have lost heart and quit. Others fall into abandon suffering moral collapse they are ill-fitted to endure.

If you're on the job you will see to it that you don't grow stale. Let the first suggestion of slowing up drive you into the open. Bathroom calisthenics may serve a temporary purpose, but they can never do what nature does for you.

There's more in life than making a living. Paid grocers and bakers should be the minimum. To live you must meet obligations of the inner man as well as the bread-and-butter instincts. You must know nature enough to blink at the stars, recognize her moods, tell her woods and living things, if you are to enjoy the vitality and freshness that really lives.—Grit.

IMPROVED ROADS

ROAD CONSTRUCTION IN 1920

Cost Was About Twice as Much as in 1917 on Account of Distinct Shortage of Labor.

(Prepared by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.)

Every kind of road cost about twice as much to build in 1920 as it did in 1917, according to the chief of the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture, and highway construction suffered more than any other class of work through railroad congestion, strikes, labor troubles and material shortages.

After the war there was a great public demand for improved roads. Many roads had been seriously damaged by war traffic, and it appeared that the return of men from military service would provide an abundance of labor. The army of laborers which was expected to apply for the work did not, however, materialize. On the contrary, there was a distinct shortage of labor, and wages reached the highest levels attained in the history of the country. In 1917, competent labor could be secured for from $1.50 to $3 per day, but the corresponding wages in 1920 were from $3 to $5 for a shorter day's work.

Well Kept Roadside Where Weeds Are Controlled by Frequent Mowing.

In proportion to this demand there was also a pronounced scarcity of construction materials. Sand, gravel, stone, and cement, and materials commonly used in road work increased in price between 1917 and 1920 from 50 to 100 per cent. Naturally, these increases in cost were reflected in the prices paid to contractors for road work. Gravel roads increased from $4,535 to $7,250 per mile; concrete from $21,165 to upward of $40,000 per mile, and brick roads from $33,000 to $55,000 per mile.

As funds available for road construction are largely limited by statute, or by the returns from taxation, a majority of the states this year have deliberately withheld work, the plans for which had been completed, until they could obtain a greater return for their expenditure.

SCOTS USED FIRST MACADAM

Resident of Ayrshire Made His First Experiments About 1814—Roads Now Common.

Macadam roads are so common in America that national pride may well lead us to look upon them as a domestic product.

But John MacAdam was a Scot, resident in Ayrshire, where he made his first experiments about 1814, according to the New York Sun. Five years later the first public roads were laid with the pavement and a grateful parliament awarded the inventor a grant of $50,000.

In 1827, after the new pavement had been thoroughly tested, MacAdam was made surveyor general of all metropolitan roads in and about London and the use of his method became general throughout the United Kingdom.

HARDING LAUDS GOOD ROADS

President in First Message to Congress Deplores Money Wasted in Improved Highways.

In no uncertain terms, President Harding expressed his opinion of the automobile, motor transport and good roads in his first message to congress. He said: "The motorcar has become an indispensable instrument in our political, social and industrial life. . . . I know of nothing more shocking than the millions of public funds wasted in improved highways—wasted because there is no policy of maintenance. Highways must be patrolled and constantly repaired."

Hens Vary in Weight.

Egg-producing hens vary in weight, the average being about four pounds. The principal breeds of egg producers are the Leghorns, the Wyandottes, the Plymouth Rocks, the Rhode Island Reds and the Minorcas.

Work Is World Wide.

Road construction and maintenance have become world-wide as well as provincial problems and foreign governments are doing much work toward highway development.

FAILURE OF SWINE TO MATE

It May Be Caused by Improper Functioning of System Brought About by Improper Feed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Failure in the ability or desire of swine to reproduce may be caused by any of several conditions, say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. It may result from a disease or injury that seriously affects or destroys the secretory reproductive organs. It may be caused by improper functioning of the system, which in turn is often brought about by unsuitable feed or faulty elimination of waste products, or it may be due to a general lowering of body vitality.

There are also cases of sterility or impotence for which definite causes are difficult to find. Failure to breed quite frequently occurs in boars and sows which have been fitted and kept in high condition for show purposes. In some instances the sow fails to come in heat, or perhaps indicates that she is in heat and is successfully served by the boar without resulting conception. In other cases the boar shows no desire to mate, or acts ineffectively.

The first step in overcoming the trouble is to find a positive cause when possible, by making a thorough examination. This should include a search for physical defects, the presence of disease, the results of injuries, or lowered vitality from any cause.

When, from such examination, it appears that proper treatment will prove successful, remedies should be administered promptly. But if the cause is obscure, or if there is little likelihood of correcting the defect successfully, it is best to remove the animal from the breeding herd. Boars may be castrated and fitted for slaughter as market hogs. Similarly, sows should be discarded when they become uncertain breeders.
